PREFACE.

'THE author arrived in the East as a Missionary towards the end of 1839, and was stationed at Malacca for between three and four Before leaving England, he had enjoyed the benefit of a few months' instruction in Chinese from the late Professor Kidd at University College, London, and was able in the beginning of 1840 to commence the study of the first of the Works in the present publi-It seemed to him then-and the experience of one and cation. twenty years gives its sanction to the correctness of the judgmentthat he should not be able to consider himself qualified for the duties of his position, until he had thoroughly mastered the Classical Books of the Chinese, and had investigated for himself the whole field of thought through which the sages of China had ranged, and in which were to be found the foundations of the moral, social, and political life of the people. Under this conviction he addressed himself eagerly to the reading of the Confucian Analects, and proceeded from them to the other Works. Circumstances occurred in the Mission at Malacca to throw various engagements upon him which left him little time to spend at his books, and he consequently sought about for all the assistance which he could find from the labours of men who had gone before.

'In this respect he was favourably situated, the charge of the Anglo-Chinese College having devolved upon him, so that he had free access to all the treasures in its Library. He had translations and dictionaries in abundance, and they facilitated his progress. Yet

he desiderated some Work upon the Classics, more critical, more full and exact, than any which he had the opportunity of consulting, and he sketched to himself the plan of its execution. This was distinctly before him in 1841, and for several years he hoped to hear that some experienced Chinese scholar was preparing to give to the public something of the kind. As time went on, and he began to feel assured as to his own progress in the language, it occurred to him that he might venture on such an undertaking himself. He studied, wrote out translations, and made notes, with the project in his mind. He hopes he can say that it did not divert him from the usual active labours of a Missionary in preaching and teaching, but it did not allow him to rest satisfied in any operations of the time then being.

'In 1856 he first talked with some of his friends about his purpose, and among them was the Rev. Josiah Cox, of the Wesleyan Missionary Society. The question of the expense of publication came up. The author's idea was that by-and-by he would be able to digest his materials in readiness for the press, and that then he would be likely, on application, to meet with such encouragement from the British and other foreign merchants in China, as would enable him to go forward with his plan. Mr. Cox, soon after, without the slightest intimation of his intention, mentioned the whole matter to his friend, Mr. Joseph Jardine. In consequence of what he reported of Mr. Jardine's sentiments, the author had an interview with that gentleman, when he very generously undertook to bear the expense of carrying the Work through the press. His lamented death leaves the author at liberty to speak more freely on this point than he would otherwise have done. Mr. Jardine expressed himself favourably of the plan, and said, "I know the liberality of the merchants in China, and that many of them would readily give their help to such an undertaking, but you need not have the trouble of canvassing the community. If you are prepared for the toil of the publication, I will bear the expense of it. We make our money in China, and we should be glad to assist in whatever promises to be of benefit to it."

'The author could not but be grateful to Mr. Jardine for his proffer, nor did he hesitate to accept it. The interruption of missionary labours, consequent on the breaking out of hostilities in the end of 1856, was favourable to retired and literary work, and he immediately set about preparing some of his materials for the press. A necessary visit to England in 1857, which kept him absent from the colony for eighteen months, proved a serious interruption, but the first-fruits of his labours are now in a state to be presented to the public.'

The preface to the former edition of this volume, when it was published at Hongkong in 1861, commenced with the preceding paragraphs. The author has thought it desirable to reproduce them, as giving an account of the first conception in his mind of his labour on the Chinese Classics, and of the circumstances under which his earlier volumes were published.

Though Mr. Joseph Jardine died before the publication of the first volume, the assistance given by him was continued with equal generosity by his brother, now Sir Robert Jardine, Baronet, until the second and third volumes had been published, and also during the preparation of the fourth and fifth volumes.

Soon after the publication of the fifth volume, which contained, besides the translation of the Confucian Text, a version of all the notes and additions to it in the voluminous Work of Tso Ch'iû-ming, the author was obliged to return to this country in 1873; but since he was appointed to his present position in the University here, translations of the Hsiâo-ching, the Yî-ching, and the Lî Chî, have been contributed by him to the series of 'The Sacred Books of the East, which has been issued from the Clarendon Press since 1879. He has thus done for the Confucian Classics more than he contemplated in 1861. He then undertook to produce versions of what are called 'The Four Books' and 'The Five King (Ching),' and added that 'if life and health were spared' he would like to give a supplementary volume or two, so as to embrace all the Books in the collection of 'The Thirteen Ching,' which began to appear under the Tang dynasty in our seventh century. He has translated ten of those Books, including the extensive Work of Tso Ch'id-ming mentioned above. Other scholars have also done their part. M: Edouard Biot, the younger, indeed, had published at Paris in 1851 his translation of 'Le Cheou Li,' the Rites, or the Official Book, of the dynasty of Chau, under which Confucius lived; and in the present year Professor C. de Harlez, of Louvaine, has given to the world a version of the other great Ritual work, the Î Li.

Thus all the 'Thirteen Ching' of China have been made accessible to scholars of the West, excepting the Urh (R) Ya, which has been named 'The Literary Expositor,' a lexical work, the precursor of the dictionaries which Chinese literature possesses in abundance.

To return to the volume of which a revised edition is now submitted to the public, the author would state that 1200 copies of it were printed in 1861. These were exhausted several years ago, and many calls for a new edition have come to him from China, to which only other engagements have prevented his responding sooner. So far as typographical execution is concerned, this edition ought to excel the former very much. Other improvements will also be discovered. The author has carefully gone over the text of the translation and notes. He is glad to have found occasion but rarely for correction and alteration of the former. thought indeed at one time of recasting the whole version in a terser and more pretentious style. He determined, however, on reflection to let it stand as it first occurred to him, his object having always been faithfulness to the original Chinese rather than grace of composition. Not that he is indifferent to the value of an elegant and idiomatic rendering in the language of the translation, and he hopes that he was able to combine in a considerable degree correctness of interpretation and acceptableness of style. He has to thank many friends whose Chinese scholarship is widely acknow-. ledged for assuring him of this.

He has seen it objected to his translations that they were modelled on the views of the great critic and philosopher of the Sung dynasty, the well-known Chû Hsî. He can only say that he commenced and has carried on his labours with the endeavour to search out the meaning for himself, independent of all commentators. He soon became aware, however, of the beauty and strength of Chû's style, the correctness of his analysis, and the comprehension and depth of his thought. That his own views of passages generally coincide with those of 'The Old Man of the Cloudy Valley' should be accepted, he submits, as complimentary to him rather than the reverse.

While this volume now reappears with few alterations of translation, it will be found that the alterations in the representation of proper names and names of Chinese characters generally are very many. The method adopted in it for the transliteration of their sounds may be considered as a compromise between that proposed by Sir Thomas F. Wade in his Hsin Ching Lû and that with which the author has become familiar through his work in connexion with 'The Sacred Books of the East.' The principal differences in the two transliterations are a for ê, âu for ou, s for j, ze for zũ, r for urh, and w for u. He has also given up attempting to reproduce in the notes and in the seventh Appendix the names and tones of the Southern Mandarin dialect, and has endeavoured to confine himself to the tones as given in the Hsin Ching Lû.

CHAPTER I.

OF THE CHINESE CLASSICS GENERALLY.

SECTION I.

BOOKS INCLUDED UNDER THE NAME OF THE CHINESE CLASSICS.

- 1. The Books now recognised as of highest authority in China are comprehended under the denominations of 'The five Ching' and 'The four Shû'.' The term Ching is of textile origin, and signifies the warp threads of a web, and their adjustment. An easy application of it is to denote what is regular and insures regularity. As used with reference to books, it indicates their authority on the subjects of which they treat. 'The five Ching' are the five canonical Works, containing the truth upon the highest subjects from the sages of China, and which should be received as law by all generations. The term Shû simply means Writings or Books, = the Pencil Speaking; it may be used of a single character, or of books containing thousands of characters.
- 2. 'The five Ching' are: the Y1's, or, as it has been styled, 'The Book of Changes;' the Shat's, or 'The Book of History;' the Shih's, or 'The Book of Poetry;' the Lt Chi's, or 'Record of Rites;' and the Ch'un Ch'iù', or 'Spring and Autumn,' a chronicle of events, extending from 722 to 481 B.C. The authorship, or compilation rather, of all these Works is loosely attributed to Confucius. But much of the Li Chi is from later hands. Of the Yi, the Shû, and the Shih, it is only in the first that we find additions attributed to the philosopher himself, in the shape of appendixes. The Ch'un Ch'iù is the only one of the five Ching which can, with an approximation to correctness, be described as of his own 'making.'

'The Four Books' is an abbreviation for 'The Books of the Four Philosophers'.' The first is the Lun Yü², or 'Digested Conversations,' being occupied chiefly with the sayings of Confucius. He is the philosopher to whom it belongs. It appears in this Work under the title of 'Confucian Analects.' The second is the Tâ Hsio³, or 'Great Learning,' now commonly attributed to Tsăng Shăn⁴, a disciple of the sage. He is the philosopher of it. The third is the Chung Yung⁶, or 'Doctrine of the Mean,' as the name has often been translated, though it would be better to render it, as in the present edition, by 'The State of Equilibrium and Harmony.' Its composition is ascribed to K'ung Chi⁶, the grandson of Confucius. He is the philosopher of it. The fourth contains the works of Mencius.

- 3. This arrangement of the Classical Books, which is commonly supposed to have originated with the scholars of the Sung dynasty, is defective. The Great Learning and the Doctrine of the Mean are both found in the Record of Rites, being the thirty-ninth and twenty-eighth Books respectively of that compilation, according to the best arrangement of it.
- 4. The oldest enumerations of the Classical Books specify only the five Ching. The Yo Chi, or 'Record of Music',' the remains of which now form one of the Books in the Li Chi, was sometimes added to those, making with them the six Ching. A division was also made into nine Ching, consisting of the Yi, the Shih, the Shu, the Châu Lî *, or 'Ritual of Châu,' the Î Lî *, or certain 'Ceremonial Usages,' the Li Chi, and the three annotated editions of the Ch'un Ch'iù 10, by Tso Ch'iù-ming 11, Kung-yang Kâo 12, and Kûliang Ch'ih 13. In the famous compilation of the Classical Books, undertaken by order of Tai-tsung, the second emperor of the Tang dynasty (A.D. 627-649), and which appeared in the reign of his successor, there are thirteen Ching, viz. the Y1, the Shih, the Shû, the three editions of the Ch'un Ch'iû, the Li Chi, the Châu Li, the Î Li, the Confucian Analects, the R Ya 14, a sort of ancient dictionary, the Hsiao Ching 15, or 'Classic of Filial Piety,' and the works of Mencius.
 - 5. A distinction, however, was made among the Works thus ·四子之書. '論語. '大學. '曾參. '中庸. '孔伋. '樂記. '周禮. '儀禮. "春秋三傳. "左丘明. "公羊高. "穀梁赤. "爾雅. "孝經. comprehended under the same common name; and Meneius, the Lun Yü, the Tâ Hsio, the Chung Yung, and the Hsiâo Ching were spoken of as the Hsiâo Ching, or 'Smaller Classics.' It thus appears, contrary to the ordinary opinion on the subject, that the Tâ Hsio and Chung Yung had been published as separate treatises before the Sung dynasty, and that Four Books, as distinguished from the greater Ching, had also previously found a place in the literature of China ¹.

SECTION II.

THE AUTHORITY OF THE CHINESE CLASSICS.

- 1. This subject will be discussed in connexion with each separate Work, and it is only designed here to exhibit generally the evidence on which the Chinese Classics claim to be received as genuine productions of the time to which they are referred.
- 2. In the memoirs of the Former Han dynasty (B.C. 202-A.D. 24), we have one chapter which we may call the History of Literature 2. It commences thus: 'After the death of Confucius 3, there was an end of his exquisite words; and when his seventy disciples had passed away, violence began to be done to their meaning. It came about that there were five different editions of the Ch'un Ch'iû, four of the Shih, and several of the Yî. Amid the disorder and collisions of the warring States (B.C. 481-220), truth and falsehood were still more in a state of warfare, and a sad confusion marked the words of the various scholars. Then came the calamity inflicted under the Chin dynasty (B.C. 220-205), when the literary monuments were destroyed by fire, in order to keep the people in ignorance. But, by and by, there arose the Han dynasty, which set itself to remedy the evil wrought by the Ch'in. Great efforts were made to collect slips and tablets 4, and the way was thrown wide open for the bringing in of Books. In the time of the emperor Hsido-wû 5 (B.C. 140-85), portions of Books being wanting and tablets lost, so that ceremonies and music were suffering great damage, he was moved to sorrow, and said, "I am very sad for this." He therefore formed the plan of Repositories. in which the Books might be stored, and appointed officers to transcribe Books on an extensive scale, embracing the works of the various scholars, that they might all be placed in the Repositories. The emperor Chang 1 (B. c. 32-5), finding that a portion of the Books still continued dispersed or missing, commissioned Ch'an Nang, the Superintendent of Guests 2, to search for undiscovered Books throughout the empire, and by special edict ordered the chief of the Banqueting House, Liù Hsiang's, to examine the Classical Works, along with the commentaries on them, the writings of the scholars, and all poetical productions; the Master-controller of Infantry. Zan Hwang 4, to examine the Books on the art of war: the Grand Historiographer, Yin Hsien 5, to examine the Books treating of the art of numbers (i.e. divination); and the imperial Physician, Li Chu-kwo to examine the Books on medicine. Whenever any book was done with, Hsiang forthwith arranged it, indexed it, and made a digest of it, which was presented to the emperor. While this work was in progress, Hsiang died, and the emperor Ai (B.C. 6-A.D. I) appointed his son, Hsin 7, a Master of the imperial carriages, to complete his father's work. On this, Hsin collected all the Books, and presented a report of them, under seven divisions.

The first of these divisions seems to have been a general catalogue s containing perhaps only the titles of the works included in the other six. The second embraced the Classical Works. From the abstract of it, which is preserved in the chapter referred to, we find that there were 294 collections of the Yi-ching from thirteen different individuals or editors 10; 412 collections of the Shū-ching, from nine different individuals; 416 volumes of the Shih-ching, from six different individuals 11; of the Books of Rites, 555 collections, from thirteen different individuals; of the Books on Music, 165 collections, from six different editors; 948 collections of History, under the heading of the Ch'un Ch'iû, from twenty-three different individuals; 229 collections of the Lun Yü, including the Analects and kindred fragments, from twelve different individuals; of the Hsiâo-ching, embracing also the R Yâ, and some other portions of the ancient literature, 59 collections, from eleven different individuals; and finally of the lesser Learning, being works on the form of the characters, 45 collections, from eleven different individuals. The works of Mencius were included in the second division, among the writings of what were deemed orthodox scholars, of which there were 836 collections, from fifty-three different individuals.

- 3. The above important document is sufficient to show how the emperors of the Han dynasty, as soon as they had made good their possession of the empire, turned their attention to recover the ancient literature of the nation, the Classical Books engaging their first care, and how earnestly and effectively the scholars of the time responded to the wishes of their rulers. In addition to the facts specified in the preface to it, I may relate that the ordinance of the Ch'in dynasty against possessing the Classical Books (with the exception, as it will appear in its proper place, of the Yi-ching) was repealed by the second sovereign of the Han, the emperor Hsiâo Hûi³, in the fourth year of his reign, B. C. 191 and that a large portion of the Shû-ching was recovered in the time of the third emperor, B. C. 179-157, while in the year B.C. 136 a special Board was constituted, consisting of literati, who were put in charge of the five Ching 4.
- 4. The collections reported on by Liû Hsin suffered damage in the troubles which began A.D. 8, and continued till the rise of the second or eastern Han dynasty in the year 25. The founder of it (A.D. 25-57) zealously promoted the undertaking of his predecessors, and additional repositories were required for the Books which were collected. His successors, the emperors Hsiâo-ming 5 (58-75), Hsiâo-chang 6 (76-88), and Hsiâo-hwo 7 (89-105), took a part themselves in the studies and discussions of the literary tribunal, and · 凿子略. '儒家者流. '孝惠皇帝. '武帝建元五年,初置五經博士. '顯宗孝明皇帝. '肅宗孝章皇帝. '孝和皇帝. the emperor Hsiâo-ling¹, between the years 172-178, had the text of the five Ching, as it had been fixed, cut in slabs of stone, and set up in the capital outside the gate of the Grand College. Some old accounts say that the characters were in three different forms, but they were only in one form;—see the 287th book of Chû Î-tsun's great Work.

- 5. Since the Han, the successive dynasties have considered the literary monuments of the country to be an object of their special care. Many of them have issued editions of the Classics, embodying the commentaries of preceding generations. No dynasty has distinguished itself more in this line than the present Manchau possessors of the empire. In fine, the evidence is complete that the Classical Books of China have come down from at least a century before our Christian era, substantially the same as we have them at present.
- 6. But it still remains to inquire in what condition we may suppose the Books were, when the scholars of the Han dynasty commenced their labours upon them. They acknowledge that the tablets—we cannot here speak of manuscripts—were mutilated and in disorder. Was the injury which they had received of such an extent that all the care and study put forth on the small remains would be of little use? This question can be answered satisfactorily, only by an examination of the evidence which is adduced for the text of each particular Classic; but it can be made apparent that there is nothing, in the nature of the case, to interfere with our believing that the materials were sufficient to enable the scholars to execute the work intrusted to them.
- 7. The burning of the ancient Books by order of the founder of the Ch'in dynasty is always referred to as the greatest disaster which they sustained, and with this is coupled the slaughter of many of the Literati by the same monarch.

The account which we have of these transactions in the Historical Records is the following²:

'In his 34th year [the 34th year, that is, after he had ascended the throne of Chin. It was only the 9th after he had been acknowledged Sovereign of the empire, coinciding with B.C. 213], the emperor, returning from a visit to the south, which had extended as far as Yüeh, gave a feast in his palace at Hsien-yang, when the Great Scholars, amounting to seventy men, appeared and wished him long life 1. One of the principal ministers, Chau Ching-ch'an 3, came forward and said, "Formerly, the State of Chin was only 1000 li in extent, but Your Majesty, by your spirit-like efficacy and intelligent wisdom, has tranquillised and settled the whole empire, and driven away all barbarous tribes, so that, wherever the sun and moon shine, all rulers appear before you as guests acknowledging subjection. You have formed the states of the various princes into provinces and districts, where the people enjoy a happy tranquillity, suffering no more from the calamities of war and contention. This condition of things will be transmitted for 10,000 generations. From the highest antiquity there has been no one in awful virtue like Your Majesty."

'The emperor was pleased with this flattery, when Shun-yu Yüch's, one of the Great Scholars, a native of Ch'i, advanced and said, "The sovereigns of Yin and Châu, for more than a thousand years, invested their sons and younger brothers, and meritorious ministers, with domains and rule, and could thus depend upon them for support and aid; -that I have heard. But now Your Majesty is in possession of all within the seas, and your sons and younger brothers are nothing but private individuals. The issue will be that some one will arise to play the part of Tien Chang 4, or of the six nobles of Tsin. Without the support of your own family, where will you find the aid which you may require? That a state of things not modelled from the lessons of antiquity can long continue; that is what I have not heard. Ching is now showing himself to be a flatterer, who increases the errors of Your Majesty, and not a loyal minister."

'The emperor requested the opinions of others on this representation, and the premier, Li Sze 5, said, "The five emperors were not one the double of the other, nor did the three dynasties accept one another's ways. Each had a peculiar system of government, not for the sake of the contrariety, but as being required by the changed times. Now, Your Majesty has laid the foundations of imperial sway, so that it will last for 10,000 generations. This is indeed beyond what a stupid scholar can understand. And, moreover, Yüeh only talks of things belonging to the Three Dynasties, which are not fit to be models to you. At other times, when the princes were all striving together, they endeavoured to gather the wandering scholars about them; but now, the empire is in a stable condition, and laws and ordinances issue from one supreme authority. Let those of the people who abide in their homes give their strength to the toils of husbandry, while those who become scholars should study the various laws and prohibitions. Instead of doing this, however, the scholars do not learn what belongs to the present day, but study antiquity. They go on to condemn the present time, leading the masses of the people astray, and to disorder.

"At the risk of my life, I, the prime minister, say: Formerly, when the nation was disunited and disturbed, there was no one who could give unity to it. The princes therefore stood up together; constant references were made to antiquity to the injury of the present state; baseless statements were dressed up to confound what was real, and men made a boast of their own peculiar learning to condemn what their rulers appointed. And now, when Your Majesty has consolidated the empire, and, distinguishing black from white, has constituted it a stable unity, they still honour their peculiar learning, and combine together; they teach men what is contrary to your laws. When they hear that an ordinance has been issued, every one sets to discussing it with his learning. the court, they are dissatisfied in heart; out of it, they keep talking in the streets. While they make a pretence of vaunting their Master, they consider it fine to have extraordinary views of their own. And so they lead on the people to be guilty of murmuring and evil speaking. If these things are not prohibited, Your Majesty's authority will decline, and parties will be formed. The best way is to prohibit them. I pray that all the Records in charge of the Historiographers be burned, excepting those of Ch'in; that, with the exception of those officers belonging to the Board of Great Scholars, all throughout the empire who presume to keep copies of the Shih-ching, or of the Shû-ching, or of the books of the Hundred Schools, be required to go with them to the officers in charge of the several districts, and burn them1; that all who may dare to speak together about the Shih and the Shih be put to death, and their bodies exposed in the market-place; that those who make mention of the past, so as to blame the present, be put to death along with their relatives; that officers who shall know of the violation of those rules and not inform against the offenders, be held equally guilty with them; and that whoever shall not have burned their Books within thirty days after the issuing of the ordinance, be branded and sent to labour on the wall for four years. The only Books which should be spared are those on medicine, divination, and husbandry. Whoever wants to learn the laws may go to the magistrates and learn of them."

'The imperial decision was-"Approved."'

The destruction of the scholars is related more briefly. year after the burning of the Books, the resentment of the emperor was excited by the remarks and flight of two scholars who had been favourites with him, and he determined to institute a strict inquiry about all of their class in Hsien-yang, to find out whether they had been making ominous speeches about him, and disturbing the minds The investigation was committed to the Censors, of the people. and it being discovered that upwards of 460 scholars had violated the prohibitions, they were all buried alive in pits?, for a warning to the empire, while degradation and banishment were employed more strictly than before against all who fell under suspicion. The emperor's eldest son, Fû-sû, remonstrated with him, saying that such measures against those who repeated the words of Confucius and sought to imitate him, would alienate all the people from their infant dynasty, but his interference offended his father so much that he was sent off from court, to be with the general who was superintending the building of the great wall.

8. No attempts have been made by Chinese critics and historians to discredit the record of these events, though some have questioned the extent of the injury inflicted by them on the monuments of their ancient literature. It is important to observe that the edict against the Books did not extend to the Yi-ching, which was '御史恐案間諸生,諸生傳相告引. '自除犯禁者,四百六十餘人,皆院之咸陽. The meaning of this passage as a whole is sufficiently plain, but I am unable to make out the force of the phrase 自除.

* See the remarks of Chang Chia-tsi (夾際鄭氏), of the Sung dynasty, on the subject, in the 文獻通考, Bk. clxxiv. p. 5.

exempted as being a work on divination, nor did it extend to the other classics which were in charge of the Board of Great Scholars. There ought to have been no difficulty in finding copies when the Han dynasty superseded that of Ch'in, and probably there would have been none but for the sack of the capital in B.C. 206 by Hsiang Yü, the formidable opponent of the founder of the House of Han. Then, we are told, the fires blazed for three months among the palaces and public buildings, and must have proved as destructive to the copies of the Great Scholars as the edict of the tyrant had been to the copies among the people.

It is to be noted also that the life of Shih Hwang Ti lasted only three years after the promulgation of his edict. He died in B.C. 210, and the reign of his second son who succeeded him lasted only other three years. A brief period of disorder and struggling for the supreme authority between different chiefs ensued; but the reign of the founder of the Han dynasty dates from B.C. 202. Thus, eleven years were all which intervened between the order for the burning of the Books and the rise of that family, which signalized itself by the care which it bestowed for their recovery; and from the edict of the tyrant of Ch'in against private individuals having copies in their keeping, to its express abrogation by the emperor Hsiao Hûi, there were only twenty-two years. We may believe, indeed, that vigorous efforts to carry the edict into effect would not be continued longer than the life of its author,—that is, not for more than about three years. The calamity inflicted on the ancient Books of China by the House of Chin could not have approached to anything like a complete destruction of them. There would be no occasion for the scholars of the Han dynasty, in regard to the bulk of their ancient literature, to undertake more than the work of recension and editing.

9. The idea of forgery by them on a large scale is out of the question. The catalogues of Liang Hsin enumerated more than 13,000, volumes of a larger or smaller size, the productions of nearly 600 different writers, and arranged in thirty-eight subdivisions of subjects 1. In the third catalogue, the first subdivision contained the orthodox writers 2, to the number of fifty-three, with 836 Works or portions of their Works. Between Mencius and

'凡 書 六 略, 三 十 八 種, 五 百 九 十 六 家, 萬 三 千 二 百 六 十 九 卷. '儒家 者 流. K'ung Chî, the grandson of Confucius, eight different authors have place. The second subdivision contained the Works of the Tāoist school 1, amounting to 993 collections, from thirty-seven different authors. The sixth subdivision contained the Mohist writers 2, to the number of six, with their productions in 86 collections. I specify these two subdivisions, because they embrace the Works of schools or sects antagonistic to that of Confucius, and some of them still hold a place in Chinese literature, and contain many references to the five Classics, and to Confucius and his disciples.

10. The inquiry pursued in the above paragraphs conducts us to the conclusion that the materials from which the Classics, as they have come down to us, were compiled and edited in the two centuries preceding our Christian era, were genuine remains, going back to a still more remote period. The injury which they sustained from the dynasty of Ch'in was. I believe, the same in character as that to which they were exposed during all the time of 'the Warring States.' It may have been more intense in degree, but the constant warfare which prevailed for some centuries among the different states which composed the kingdom was eminently unfavourable to the cultivation of literature. Mencius tells us how the princes had made away with many of the records of antiquity, from which their own usurpations and innovations might have been condemned. Still the times were not unfruitful, either in scholars or statesmen, to whom the ways and monuments of antiquity were dear, and the space from the rise of the Chin dynasty to the death of Confucius was not very great. It only amounted to 258 years. Between these two periods Mencius stands as a connecting link. Born probably in the year B.C. 371, he reached, by the intervention of Kung Chi, back to the sage himself, and as his death happened B.C. 288, we are brought down to within nearly half a century of the Ch'in dynasty. From all these considerations we may proceed with confidence to consider each separate Work, believing that we have in these Classics and Books what the great sage of China and his disciples gave to their country more than 2000 years ago.

OF THE CONFUCIAN ANALECTS.

SECTION I.

FORMATION OF THE TEXT OF THE ANALECTS BY THE SCHOLARS OF THE HAN DYNASTY.

- r. When the work of collecting and editing the remains of the Classical Books was undertaken by the scholars of Han, there appeared two different copies of the Analects, one from Lû, the native State of Confucius, and the other from Chû, the State adjoining. Between these there were considerable differences. The former consisted of twenty Books or Chapters, the same as those into which the Classic is now divided. The latter contained two Books in addition, and in the twenty Books, which they had in common, the chapters and sentences were somewhat more numerous than in the Lû exemplar.
- 2. The names of several individuals are given, who devoted themselves to the study of those two copies of the Classic. Among the patrons of the Lû copy are mentioned the names of Hsiâ-hâu Shăng, grand-tutor of the heir-apparent, who died at the age of 90, and in the reign of the emperor Hsüan (B.C. 73-49)¹; Hsiâo Wang-chih², a general-officer, who died in the reign of the emperor Yüan (B.C. 48-33); Wei Hsien, who was premier of the empire from B.C. 70-66; and his son Hsüan-ch'ăng³. As patrons of the Ch'î copy, we have Wang Ch'ing, who was a censor in the year B.C. 99⁴; Yung Shăng⁵; and Wang Chî⁶, a statesman who died in the beginning of the reign of the emperor Yüan.
- 3. But a third copy of the Analects was discovered about B.C. 150. One of the sons of the emperor Ching was appointed king of Lû in the year B.C. 154, and some time after, wishing to enlarge his palace, he proceeded to pull down the house of the K'ung family, known as that where Confucius himself had lived.
- "太子大傅夏侯勝. '前將軍,蕭望之. '丞相, 章賢,及子,玄成. '王卿. '庸生. '中尉王吉. '魯王共(or 巷).

While doing so, there were found in the wall copies of the Shû-ching, the Ch'un Ch'iû, the Hsiâo-ching, and the Lun Yü or Analects, which had been deposited there, when the edict for the burning of the Books was issued. They were all written, however, in the most ancient form of the Chinese character¹, which had fallen into disuse, and the king returned them to the K'ung family, the head of which, K'ung Ân-kwo², gave himself to the study of them, and finally, in obedience to an imperial order, published a Work called 'The Lun Yü, with Explanations of the Characters, and Exhibition of the Meaning 3.'

- 4. The recovery of this copy will be seen to be a most important circumstance in the history of the text of the Analects. It is referred to by Chinese writers, as 'The old Lun Yu.' In the historical narrative which we have of the affair, a circumstance is added which may appear to some minds to throw suspicion on the whole account. The king was finally arrested, we are told, in his purpose to destroy the house, by hearing the sounds of bells, musical stones, lutes, and citherns, as he was ascending the steps that led to the ancestral hall or temple. This incident was contrived, we may suppose, by the K'ung family, to preserve the house, or it may have been devised by the historian to glorify the sage, but we may not, on account of it, discredit the finding of the ancient copies of the Books. We have K'ung An-kwo's own account of their being committed to him, and of the ways which he took to decipher them. The work upon the Analects, mentioned above, has not indeed come down to us, but his labours on the Shû-ching still remain.
- 5. It has been already stated, that the Lun Yü of Ch'i contained two Books more than that of Lû. In this respect, the old Lun Yü agreed with the Lû exemplar. Those two books were wanting in it as well. The last book of the Lû Lun was divided in it, however, into two, the chapter beginning, 'Yao said,' forming a whole Book by itself, and the remaining two chapters formed another Book beginning 'Tsze-chang.' With this trifling difference, the old and the Lû copies appear to have agreed together.
 - 6. Chang Yu, prince of An-ch'ang 4, who died B.C. 4, after having
- 1科子文子,—lit. 'tadpole characters.' They were, it is said, the original forms devised by Th'ang-chieh, with large heads and fine tails, like the creature from which they were named. See the notes to the preface to the Shû-ching in 'The Thirteen Classics.'

sustained several of the highest offices of the empire, instituted a comparison between the exemplars of Lû and Chî, with a view to determine the true text. The result of his labours appeared in twenty-one Books, which are mentioned in Liû Hsin's catalogue. They were known as the Lun of prince Chang i, and commanded general approbation. To Chang Yü is commonly ascribed the ejecting from the Classic the two additional books which the Chi exemplar contained, but Mâ Twan-lin prefers to rest that circumstance on the authority of the old Lun, which we have seen was without them 2. If we had the two Books, we might find sufficient reason from their contents to discredit them. That may have been sufficient for Chang Yü to condemn them as he did, but we can hardly suppose that he did not have before him the old Lun, which had come to light about a century before he published his Work.

- 7. In the course of the second century, a new edition of the Analects, with a commentary, was published by one of the greatest scholars which China has ever produced, Chang Hstian, known also as Chang K'ang-ch'ang³. He died in the reign of the emperor Hsien (A.D. 190-220)⁴ at the age of 74, and the amount of his labours on the ancient classical literature is almost incredible. While he adopted the Lû Lun as the received text of his time, he compared it minutely with those of Ch'î and the old exemplar. In the last section of this chapter will be found a list of the readings in his commentary different from those which are now acknowledged in deference to the authority of Chû Hsî, of the Sung dynasty. They are not many, and their importance is but trifling.
- 8. On the whole, the above statements will satisfy the reader of the care with which the text of the Lun Yü was fixed during the dynasty of Han.

SECTION II.

AT WHAT TIME, AND BY WHOM, THE ANALECTS WERE WRITTEN; THEIR PLAN; AND AUTHENTICITY.

1. At the commencement of the notes upon the first Book, under the heading, 'The Title of the Work,' I have given the received account of its authorship, which precedes the catalogue of Liû Hsin. According to that, the Analects were compiled by the disciples of Confucius coming together after his death, and digesting the memorials of his discourses and conversations which they had severally preserved. But this cannot be true. We may believe, indeed, that many of the disciples put on record conversations which they had had with their master, and notes about his manners and incidents of his life, and that these have been incorporated with the Work which we have, but that Work must have taken its present form at a period somewhat later.

In Book VIII, chapters iii and iv, we have some notices of the last days of Tsang Shan, and are told that he was visited on his death-bed by the officer Mang Ching. Now Ching was the posthumous title of Chung-sun Chîch¹, and we find him alive (Li Chì, II. Pt. ii. 2) after the death of duke Tâo of Lû², which took place B.C. 431, about fifty years after the death of Confucius.

Again, Book XIX is all occupied with the sayings of the disciples. Confucius personally does not appear in it. Parts of it, as chapters iii, xii, and xviii, carry us down to a time when the disciples had schools and followers of their own, and were accustomed to sustain their teachings by referring to the lessons which they had heard from the sage.

Thirdly, there is the second chapter of Book XI, the second paragraph of which is evidently a note by the compilers of the Work, enumerating ten of the principal disciples, and classifying them according to their distinguishing characteristics. We can hardly suppose it to have been written while any of the ten were alive. But there is among them the name of Tsze-hsiâ, who lived to the age of about a hundred. We find him, B.C. 407, three-quarters of a century after the death of Confucius, at the court of Wei, to the prince of which he is reported to have presented some of the Classical Books ³.

2. We cannot therefore accept the above account of the origin of the Analects,—that they were compiled by the disciples of Confucius. Much more likely is the view that we owe the work to their disciples. In the note on I. ii. 1, a peculiarity is pointed out in the use of the surnames of Yew Zo and Tsang Shan, which has made some Chinese critics attribute the compilation to their followers. But this conclusion does not stand investigation. Other have assigned different portions to different schools. Thus, Book is given to the disciples of Tsze-kung; Book XI, to those of Min Tsze-ch'ien; Book XIV, to Yuan Hsien; and Book XVI has been supposed to be interpolated from the Analects of Ch'i. Even if we were to acquiesce in these decisions, we should have accounted only for a small part of the Work. It is best to rest in the general conclusion, that it was compiled by the disciples of the disciples of the sage, making free use of the written memorials concerning him which they had received, and the oral statements which they had heard, from their several masters. And we shall not be far wrong, if we determine its date as about the end of the fourth, or the beginning of the fifth century before Christ.

3. In the critical work on the Four Books, called 'Record of Remarks in the village of Yung 1,' it is observed, 'The Analects, in my opinion, were made by the disciples, just like this record of remarks. There they were recorded, and afterwards came a firstrate hand, who gave them the beautiful literary finish which we now witness, so that there is not a character which does not have its own indispensable place 2.' We have seen that the first of these statements contains only a small amount of truth with regard to the materials of the Analects, nor can we receive the second. If one hand or one mind had digested the materials provided by many, the arrangement and style of the work would have been different. We should not have had the same remark appearing in several Books, with little variation, and sometimes with none at Nor can we account on this supposition for such fragments as the last chapters of the ninth, tenth, and sixteenth Books, and many others. No definite plan has been kept in view throughout A degree of unity appears to belong to some Books more than others, and in general to the first ten more than to those which follow, but there is no progress of thought or illustration of subject from Book to Book. And even in those where the chapters have a common subject, they are thrown together at random more than on any plan.

4. We cannot tell when the Work was first called the Lun Yü¹. The evidence in the preceding section is sufficient to prove that when the Han scholars were engaged in collecting the ancient Books, it came before them, not in broken tablets, but complete, and arranged in Books or Sections, as we now have it. The Old copy was found deposited in the wall of the house which Confucius had occupied, and must have been placed there not later than B.C. 211, distant from the date which I have assigned to the compilation, not much more than a century and a half. That copy, written in the most ancient characters, was, possibly, the autograph of the compilers.

We have the Writings, or portions of the Writings, of several authors of the third and fourth centuries before Christ. Of these, in addition to 'The Great Learning,' 'The Doctrine of the Mean,' and 'The Works of Mencius,' I have looked over the Works of Hsün Ch'ing 2 of the orthodox school, of the philosophers Chwang and Lieh of the Tâoist school³, and of the heresiarch Mo⁴.

In the Great Learning, Commentary, chapter iv, we have the words of Ana. XII. xiii. In the Doctrine of the Mean, ch. iii, we have Ana. VI. xxvii; and in ch. xxviii. 5, we have substantially Ana. III. ix. In Mencius, II. Pt. I. ii. 19, we have Ana. VII. xxxiii, and in vii. 2, Ana. IV. i; in III. Pt. I. iv. 11, Ana. VIII. xviii, xix; in IV. Pt. I. xiv. 1, Ana. XI. xvi. 2; in V. Pt. II. vii. 9, Ana. X. xiii. 4; and in VII. Pt. II. xxxvii. 1, 2, 8, Ana. V. xxi, XIII. xxi, and XVII. xiii. These quotations, however, are introduced by 'The Master said,' or 'Confucius said,' no mention being made of any book called 'The Lun Yü,' or Analects. In the Great Learning, Commentary, x. 15, we have the words of Ana. IV. iii, and in

In the continuation of the 'General Examination of Records and Scholars (續文獻通考),' Bk. exertii. p. 17, it is said, indeed, on the authority of Wang Ch'ung (王克), a scholar of our first century, that when the Work came out of the wall it was named a Chwan or Record (傳), and that it was when K'ung Ân-kwo instructed a native of Tsin, named Fû-ch'ing, in it, that it first got the name of Lun Yü:一武帝得論語于孔壁中,皆名曰傳,孔安國以古論教晉人扶卿,始日論語。If it were so, it is strange the circumstance is not mentioned in Ho Yen's preface. '荀卿. '莊子,列子. '墨子.

Mencius, III. Pt. II. vii. 3, those of Ana. XVII. i, but without any notice of quotation.

In the Writings of Hsun Ching, Book I. page 2, we find something like the words of Ana. XV. xxx; and on p. 6, part of XIV. xxv. But in these instances there is no mark of quotation.

In the Writings of Chwang, I have noted only one passage where the words of the Analects are reproduced. Ana. XVIII. v is found, but with large additions, and no reference of quotation, in his treatise on 'Man in the World, associated with other Men 1.' In all those Works, as well as in those of Lieh and Mo, the references to Confucius and his disciples, and to many circumstances of his life, are numerous?. The quotations of sayings of his not found in the Analects are likewise many, especially in the Doctrine of the Mean, in Mencius, and in the Works of Chwang. Those in the latter are mostly burlesques, but those by the orthodox writers have more or less of classical authority. Some of them may be found in the Chia Yus, or 'Narratives of the School,' and in parts of the Li Chi, while others are only known to us by their occurrence in these Writings. Altogether, they do not supply the evidence, for which I am in quest, of the existence of the Analects as a distinct Work, bearing the name of the Lun Yu, prior to the Chin They leave the presumption, however, in favour of those conclusions, which arises from the facts stated in the first section, undisturbed. They confirm it rather. They show that there was abundance of materials at hand to the scholars of Han, to compile a much larger Work with the same title, if they had felt it their duty to do the business of compilation, and not that of editing.

SECTION III.

OF COMMENTARIES UPON THE ANALECTS.

r. It would be a vast and unprofitable labour to attempt to give a list of the Commentaries which have been published on this Work. My object is merely to point out how zealously the business of interpretation was undertaken, as soon as the text had been recovered by the scholars of the Han dynasty, and with what industry it has been persevered in down to the present time.

2. Mention has been made, in Section I, 6, of the Lun of prince Chang, published in the half century before our era. Pao Hsien, a distinguished scholar and officer, of the reign of Kwang-wû 2, the first emperor of the Eastern Han dynasty, A.D. 25-57, and another scholar of the surname Chau's, less known but of the same time. published Works, containing arrangements of this in chapters and sentences, with explanatory notes. The critical work of Kung An-kwo on the old Lun Yu has been referred to. That was lost in consequence of suspicions under which An-kwo fell towards the close of the reign of the emperor Wû, but in the time of the emperor Shun, A.D. 126-144, another scholar, Må Yung4, undertook the exposition of the characters in the old Lun, giving at the same time his views of the general meaning. The labours of Chang Hsuan in the second century have been mentioned. Not long after his death, there ensued a period of anarchy, when the empire was divided into three governments, well known from the celebrated historical romance, called 'The Three Kingdoms.' The strongest of them, the House of Wei, patronized literature, and three of its high officers and scholars, Ch'an Ch'un, Wang Sû, and Chau Shang-liehs, in the first half, and probably the second quarter, of the third century, all gave to the world their notes on the Analects.

Very shortly after, five of the great ministers of the Government of Wei, Sun Yung, Chang Chung, Tsao Hsi, Hsun Kat, and Ho Yen, united in the production of one great Work, entitled, 'A Collection of Explanations of the Lun Yu'.' It embodied the labours of all the writers which have been mentioned, and, having been frequently reprinted by succeeding dynasties, it still remains. The preface of the five compilers, in the form of a memorial to the emperor, so called, of the House of Wei, is published with it, and has been of much assistance to me in writing these sections. Ho Yen was the leader among them, and the work is commonly quoted as if it were the production of him alone.

3. From Ho Yen downwards, there has hardly been a dynasty which has not contributed its labourers to the illustration of the Analects. In the Liang, which occupied the throne a good part of the sixth century, there appeared the 'Comments of Hwang K'an 1, who to the seven authorities cited by Ho Yen added other thirteen, being scholars who had deserved well of the Classic during the intermediate time. Passing over other dynasties, we come to the Sung, A.D. 960-1279. An edition of the Classics was published by imperial authority, about the beginning of the eleventh century, with the title of 'The Correct Meaning.' The principal scholar . engaged in the undertaking was Hsing Ping?. The portion of it on the Analects 3 is commonly reprinted in 'The Thirteen Classics,' after Ho Yen's explanations. But the names of the Sung dynasty are all thrown into the shade by that of Chû Hsî, than whom China has not produced a greater scholar. He composed, or his disciples compiled, in the twelfth century, three Works on the Analects: the first called 'Collected Meanings';' the second, 'Collected Comments 5;' and the third, 'Queries 6.' Nothing could exceed the grace and clearness of his style, and the influence which he has exerted on the literature of China has been almost despotic.

The scholars of the present dynasty, however, seem inclined to question the correctness of his views and interpretations of the Classics, and the chief place among them is due to Mão Ch'i-ling', known by the local name of Hsì-ho'. His writings, under the name of 'The collected Works of Hsì-ho',' have been published in eighty volumes, containing between three and four hundred books or sections. He has nine treatises on the Four Books, or parts of them, and deserves to take rank with Chang Hsuan and Chu Hsi at the head of Chinese scholars, though he is a vehement opponent of the latter. Most of his writings are to be found also in the great Work called 'A Collection of Works on the Classics, under the Imperial dynasty of Ch'ing 10,' which contains 1400 sections, and is a noble contribution by the scholars of the present dynasty to the illustration of its ancient literature.

SECTION IV.

OF VARIOUS READINGS.

In 'The Collection of Supplementary Observations on the Four Books', the second chapter contains a general view of commentaries on the Analects, and from it I extract the following list of various readings of the text found in the comments of Chang Hsuan, and referred to in the first section of this chapter.

Book II. i, 拱 for 共; viii, 餕 for 饌; xix, 棤 for 錯; xxiii. I, 十世可知, without 也, for 十世可知也. Book III. vii, in the clause 必也射乎, he makes a full stop at 也; xxi. I, 主 for 社. Book IV. x, 敵 for 適, and 慕 for 莫. Book V. xxi, he puts a full stop at 子. Book VI. vii, he has not the characters 則吾. Book VII. iv, 晏 for 燕; xxxiv, 子疾 simply, for 子疾病. Book IX. ix, 升 for 冕. Book XI. xxv. 7, 僎 for 撰, and 饋 for 扇. Book XIII. iii. 3, 于往 for 灵. xviii. I, 弓 for 躬. Book XIV. xxxi, 謗 for 方; xxxiv. I, 何是 栖栖者與 for 何為是 栖栖者與. Book XV. i. 2, 根 for 糧. Book XVI. i. 13, 封 for 邦. Book XVII. i, 饋 for 歸; xxiv. 2, 絞 for 徼. Book XVIII. iv, 饋 for 歸; viii. I, 侏 for 朱.

These various readings are exceedingly few, and in themselves insignificant. The student who wishes to pursue this subject at length, is provided with the means in the Work of Ti Chiâo-shâu, expressly devoted to it. It forms sections 449-473 of the Works on the Classics, mentioned at the close of the preceding section. A still more comprehensive work of the same kind is, 'The Examination of the Text of the Classics and of Commentaries on them,' published under the superintendence of Yüan Yüan, forming chapters 818 to 1054 of the same Collection. Chapters 1016 to 1030 are occupied with the Lun Yü; see the reference to Yüan Yüan farther on, on p. 132.

CHAPTER III.

OF THE GREAT LEARNING.

SECTION I.

HISTORY OF THE TEXT, AND THE DIFFERENT ARRANGEMENTS OF IT WHICH HAVE BEEN PROPOSED.

1. It has already been mentioned that 'The Great Learning' forms one of the Books of the Li Chi, or 'Record of Rites,' the formation of the text of which will be treated of in its proper place. I will only say here, that the Records of Rites had suffered much more, after the death of Confucius, than the other ancient Classics which were supposed to have been collected and digested by him. They were in a more dilapidated condition at the time of the revival of the ancient literature under the Han dynasty, and were then published in three collections, only one of which—the Record of Rites—retains its place among the five Ching.

The Record of Rites consists, according to the ordinary arrangement, of forty-nine Chapters or Books. Liû Hsiang (see ch. I. sect. II. 2) took the lead in its formation, and was followed by the two famous scholars, Tâi Teh 1, and his relative, Tâi Shăng 2. The first of these reduced upwards of 200 chapters, collected by Hsiang, to eighty-nine, and Shăng reduced these again to forty-six. The three other Books were added in the second century of our era, the Great Learning being one of them, by Mâ Yung, mentioned in the last chapter, section III. 2. Since his time, the Work has not received any further additions.

2. In his note appended to what he calls the chapter of 'Classical Text,' Chû Hsî says that the tablets of the 'old copies' of the rest of the Great Learning were considerably out of order. By those old copies, he intends the Work of Chăng Hsüan, who published his commentary on the Classic, soon after it was completed by the additions of Mâ Yung; and it is possible that the tablets were in confusion, and had not been arranged with sufficient care; but such a thing does not appear to have been suspected until the twelfth century, nor can any evidence from ancient monuments be adduced in its support.

I have related how the ancient Classics were cut on slabs of stone by imperial order, A.D. 175, the text being that which the various literati had determined, and which had been adopted by Chang Hsüan. The same work was performed about seventy years later, under the so-called dynasty of Wei, between the years 240 and 248, and the two sets of slabs were set up together. The only difference between them was, that whereas the Classics had been cut in the first instance only in one form, the characters in the slabs of Wei were in three different forms. Amid the changes of dynasties, the slabs both of Han and Wei had perished, or nearly so, before the rise of the Tang dynasty, A.D. 624; but under one of its emperors, in the year 836, a copy of the Classics was again cut on stone, though only in one form of the character. These slabs we can trace down through the Sung dynasty, when they were known as the tablets of Shen. They were in exact conformity with the text of the Classics adopted by Chang Hsüan in his commentaries; and they exist at the present day at the city of Hsì-an, Shen-hsì, still called by the same name.

The Sung dynasty did not accomplish a similar work itself, nor did either of the two which followed it think it necessary to engrave in stone in this way the ancient Classics. About the middle of the sixteenth century, however, the literary world in China was startled by a report that the slabs of Wei which contained the Great Learning had been discovered. But this was nothing more than the result of an impudent attempt at an imposition, for which it is difficult to a foreigner to assign any adequate cause. The treatise, as printed from these slabs, has some trifling additions, and many alterations in the order of the text, but differing from the arrangements proposed by Chû Hsî, and by other scholars. There seems to be now no difference of opinion among Chinese critics that the whole affair was a forgery. The text of the Great Learning, as it appears in the Record of Rites with the commentary of Chang Hsüan, and was thrice engraved on stone, in three different dynasties, is, no doubt, that which was edited in the Han dynasty by Mâ Yung.

3. I have said, that it is possible that the tablets containing the text were not arranged with sufficient care by him; and indeed, any one who studies the treatise attentively, will probably come to the conclusion that the part of it forming the first six chapters of commentary in the present Work is but a fragment. It would not be a difficult task to propose an arrangement of the text different from any which I have yet seen; but such an undertaking would not be interesting out of China. My object here is simply to mention the Chinese scholars who have rendered themselves famous or notorious in their own country by what they have done in this way. first was Ch'ang Hao, a native of Lo-yang in Ho-nan province, in the eleventh century. His designation was Po-shun, but since his death he has been known chiefly by the style of Ming-tâo 2, which we may render the Wise-in-doctrine. The eulogies heaped on him by Chû Hsi and others are extravagant, and he is placed immediately after Mencius in the list of great scholars. Doubtless he was a man of vast literary acquirements. The greatest change which he introduced into the Great Learning, was to read sin's for ch'int, at the commencement, making the second object proposed in the treatise to be the renovation of the people, instead of loving them. This alteration and his various transpositions of the text are found in Mâo Hsî-ho's treatise on 'The Attested Text of the Great Learning 5.'

Hardly less illustrious than Ch'ang Hao was his younger brother Ch'ang Î, known by the style of Chang-shû, and since his death by that of Î-chwan. He followed Hao in the adoption of the reading 'to renovate,' instead of 'to love.' But he transposed the text differently, more akin to the arrangement afterwards made by Chu Hsì, suggesting also that there were some superfluous sentences in the old text which might conveniently be erased. The Work, as proposed to be read by him, will be found in the volume of Mao just referred to.

We come to the name of Chû Hsî who entered into the labours of the brothers Chang, the younger of whom he styles his Master, in his introductory note to the Great Learning. His arrangement of the text is that now current in all the editions of the Four Books, and it had nearly displaced the ancient text altogether. The sanction of Imperial approval was given to it during the Yüän and Ming dynasties. In the editions of the Five Ching published by them, only the names of the Doctrine of the Mean and the Great Learning were preserved. No text of these Books was given, and Hsî-ho tells us that in the reign of Chiâ-ching¹, the most flourishing period of the Ming dynasty (A.D. 1522-1566), when Wang Wăn-ch'ăng² published a copy of the Great Learning, taken from the T'ang edition of the Thirteen Ching, all the officers and scholars looked at one another in astonishment, and were inclined to suppose that the Work was a forgery. Besides adopting the reading of sin for ch'in from the Ch'ăng, and modifying their arrangements of the text, Chû Hsî made other innovations. He first divided the whole into one chapter of Classical text, which he assigned to Confucius, and ten chapters of Commentary, which he assigned to the disciple Tsăng. Previous to him, the whole had been published, indeed, without any specification of chapters and paragraphs. He undertook, moreover, to supply one whole chapter, which he supposed, after his master Ch'ăng, to be missing.

Since the time of Chû Hsî, many scholars have exercised their wit on the Great Learning. The work of Mão Hsî-ho contains four arrangements of the text, proposed respectively by the scholars Wang Lû-châi³, Chî P'ăng-shan⁴, Kâo Ching-yî⁵, and Ko Ch'î-chan⁵. The curious student may examine them there.

The curious student may examine them there.

Under the present dynasty, the tendency has been to depreciate the labours of Chû Hsî. The integrity of the text of Chăng Hsüan is zealously maintained, and the simpler method of interpretation employed by him is advocated in preference to the more refined and ingenious schemes of the Sung scholars. I have referred several times in the notes to a Work published a few years ago, under the title of 'The Old Text of the sacred Ching, with Commentary and Discussions, by Lo Chung-fan of Nan-hâi'.' I knew the man many years ago. He was a fine scholar, and had taken the second degree, or that of Chü-zân. He applied to me in 1843 for Christian baptism, and, offended by my hesitancy, went and enrolled himself among the disciples of another missionary. He soon, however, withdrew into seclusion, and spent the last years of his life in literary studies. His family have published the Work on the Great Learning, and one or two others. He most vehemently impugns nearly every judgment of Chû Hsî; but in his own exhibitions of the meaning he blends many ideas of the Supreme Being and of the condition of human nature, which he had learned from the Christian Scriptures.

SECTION II.

OF THE AUTHORSHIP, AND DISTINCTION OF THE TEXT INTO CLASSICAL TEXT AND COMMENTARY.

- 1. The authorship of the Great Learning is a very doubtful point, and one on which it does not appear possible to come to a decided conclusion. Chû Hsî, as I have stated in the last section, determined that so much of it was Ching, or Classic, being the very words of Confucius, and that all the rest was Chwan. or Commentary, being the views of Tsang Shan upon the sage's words, recorded by his disciples. Thus, he does not expressly attribute the composition of the Treatise to Tsang, as he is generally supposed to do. What he says, however, as it is destitute of external support, is contrary also to the internal evidence. The fourth chapter of commentary commences with 'The Master said.' Surely, if there were anything more, directly from Confucius, there would be an intimation of it in the same way. Or, if we may allow that short sayings of Confucius might be interwoven with the Work, as in the fifteenth paragraph of the tenth chapter, without referring them expressly to him, it is too much to ask us to receive the long chapter at the beginning as being from him. With regard to the Work having come from the disciples of Tsang Shan, recording their master's views, the paragraph in chapter sixth, commencing with 'The disciple Tsang said,' seems to be conclusive against such an hypothesis. So much we may be sure is Tsăng's, and no more. Both of Cha Hsi's judgments must be set aside. We cannot admit either the distinction of the contents into Classical text and Commentary, or that the Work was the production of Tsang's disciples
- 2. Who then was the author? An ancient tradition attributes it to K'ung Chi, the grandson of Confucius. In a notice published, at the time of their preparation, about the stone slabs of Wei, the following statement by Chiā K'wei, a noted scholar of the first century, is found:— 'When K'ung Chī was living, and in straits, in Sung, being afraid lest the lessons of the former sages should become obscure, and the principles of the ancient sovereigns and kings fall to the ground, he therefore made the Great Learning as the warp of them, and the Doctrine of the Mean as the woof'.' This would seem, therefore, to have been the opinion of that early time, and I may say the only difficulty in admitting it is that no mention is made of it by Chang Hsüan. There certainly is that agreement between the two treatises, which makes their common authorship not at all unlikely.

3. Though we cannot positively assign the authorship of the Great Learning, there can be no hesitation in receiving it as a genuine monument of the Confucian school. There are not many words in it from the sage himself, but it is a faithful reflection of his teachings, written by some of his followers, not far removed from him by lapse of time. It must synchronize pretty nearly with the Analects, and may be safely referred to the fifth century before our era.

SECTION III.

ITS SCOPE AND VALUE.

- 1. The worth of the Great Learning has been celebrated in most extravagant terms by Chinese writers, and there have been foreigners who have not yielded to them in their estimation of it. Pauthier, in the 'Argument Philosophique,' prefixed to his translation of the Work, says:—'It is evident that the aim of the Chinese philosopher is to exhibit the duties of political government as those of the perfecting of self, and of the practice of virtue by all men. He felt that he had a higher mission than that with which the greater part of ancient and modern philosophers have contented themselves; and his immense love for the happiness of humanity, which dominated over all his other sentiments, has made of his philosophy a system of social perfectionating, which, we venture to say, has never been equalled.'

Very different is the judgment passed upon the treatise by a writer in the Chinese Repository: 'The Tâ Hsio is a short politico-moral discourse. Tâ Hsio, or "Superior Learning," is at the same time both the name and the subject of the discourse; it is the summum bonum of the Chinese. In opening this Book, compiled by a disciple of Confucius, and containing his doctrines, we might expect to find a Work like Cicero's De Officiis; but we find a very different production, consisting of a few commonplace rules for the maintenance of a good government.'

My readers will perhaps think, after reading the present section, that the truth lies between these two representations.

- 2. I believe that the Book should be styled T'di Hsio 2, and not Tâ Hsio, and that it was so named as setting forth the higher and more extensive principles of moral science, which come into use and manifestation in the conduct of government. When Chû Hat endeavours to make the title mean—'The principles of Learning, which were taught in the higher schools of antiquity,' and tells us, how at the age of fifteen, all the sons of the sovereign, with the legitimate sons of the nobles, and high officers, down to the more promising scions of the common people, all entered these seminaries, and were taught the difficult lessons here inculcated, we pity the ancient youth of China. Such 'strong meat' is not adapted for the nourishment of youthful minds. But the evidence adduced for the existence of such educational institutions in ancient times is unsatisfactory, and from the older interpretation of the title we advance more easily to contemplate the object and method of the Work.
- 3. The object is stated definitely enough in the opening paragraph: 'What the Great Learning teaches, is—to illustrate illustrious virtue; to love the people; and to rest in the highest excellence.' The political aim of the writer is here at once evident. He has before him on one side, the people, the masses of the empire, and over against them are those whose work and duty, delegated by Heaven, is to govern them, culminating, as a class, in 'the som of Heaven',' 'the One man',' the sovereign. From the fourth and fifth paragraphs, we see that if the lessons of the treatise be learned and carried into practice, the result will be that 'illustrious virtue will be illustrated throughout the nation,' which will be brought, through all its length and breadth, to a condition of happy tranquillity. This object is certainly both grand and good; and if a reasonable and likely method to secure it were proposed in the Work, language would hardly supply terms adequate to express its value.

- 4. But the above account of the object of the Great Learning leads us to the conclusion that the student of it should be a sovereign. What interest can an ordinary man have in it? It is high up in the clouds, far beyond his reach. This is a serious objection to it, and quite unfits it for a place in schools, such as Chû Hsi contends it once had. Intelligent Chinese, whose minds were somewhat quickened by Christianity, have spoken to me of this defect, and complained of the difficulty they felt in making the book a practical directory for their conduct. 'It is so vague and vast,' was the observation of one man. The writer, however, has made some provision for the general application of his instructions. He tells us that, from the sovereign down to the mass of the people, all must consider the cultivation of the person to be the root, that is, the first thing to be attended to. As in his method, moreover, he reaches from the cultivation of the person to the tranquillization of the kingdom, through the intermediate steps of the regulation of the family, and the government of the State, there is room for setting forth principles that parents and rulers generally may find adapted for their guidance.
- 5. The method which is laid down for the attainment of the great object proposed, consists of seven steps:—the investigation of things; the completion of knowledge; the sincerity of the thoughts; the rectifying of the heart; the cultivation of the person; the regulation of the family; and the government of the State. These form the steps of a climax, the end of which is the kingdom tranquillized. Pauthier calls the paragraphs where they occur instances of the sorites, or abridged syllogism. But they belong to rhetoric, and not to logic.
- 6. In offering some observations on these steps, and the writer's treatment of them, it will be well to separate them into those preceding the cultivation of the person, and those following it; and to deal with the latter first.—Let us suppose that the cultivation of the person is fully attained, every discordant mental element having been subdued and removed. It is assumed that the regulation of the family will necessarily flow from this. Two short paragraphs are all that are given to the illustration of the point, and they are vague generalities on the subject of men's being led astray by their feelings and affections.

The family being regulated, there will result from it the government of the State. First, the virtues taught in the family have their correspondencies in the wider sphere. Filial piety will appear as loyalty. Fraternal submission will be seen in respect and obedience to elders and superiors. Kindness is capable of universal application. Second, 'From the loving example of one family, a whole State becomes loving, and from its courtesies the whole State becomes courteous.' Seven paragraphs suffice to illustrate these statements, and short as they are, the writer goes back to the topic of self-cultivation, returning from the family to the individual.

The State being governed, the whole empire will become peaceful and happy. There is even less of connexion, however, in the treatment of this theme, between the premiss and the conclusion, than in the two previous chapters. Nothing is said about the relation between the whole kingdom, and its component States, or any one of them. It is said at once, 'What is meant by "The making the whole kingdom peaceful and happy depends on the government of the State," is this :-- When the sovereign behaves to his aged, as the aged should be behaved to, the people become filial, when the sovereign behaves to his elders, as elders should be behaved to, the people learn brotherly submission; when the sovereign treats compassionately the young and helpless, the people do the same ?. This is nothing but a repetition of the preceding chapter, instead of that chapter's being made a step from which to go on to the splendid consummation of the good government of the whole kingdom.

The words which I have quoted are followed by a very striking enunciation of the golden rule in its negative form, and under the name of the measuring square, and all the lessons of the chapter are connected more or less closely with that. The application of this principle by a ruler, whose heart is in the first place in leving sympathy with the people, will guide him in all the exactions which he lays upon them, and in his selection of ministers, in such a way that he will secure the affections of his subjects, and his throne will be established, for 'by gaining the people, the kingdom is gained, and, by losing the people, the kingdom is lost.' There are in this part of the treatise many valuable sentiments, and counsels for all in authority over others. The objection to it is, that, as the last step of the climax, it does not rise upon all the others with the accumulated force of their conclusions, but introduces us to new principles of action, and a new line of argument. Cut off the commencement of the first paragraph which connects it with the preceding chapters, and it would form a brief but admirable treatise by itself on the art of government.

This brief review of the writer's treatment of the concluding steps of his method will satisfy the reader that the execution is not equal to the design; and, moreover, underneath all the reasoning, and more especially apparent in the eighth and ninth chapters of commentary (according to the ordinary arrangement of the work), there lies the assumption that example is all but omnipotent. We find this principle pervading all the Confucian philosophy. And doubtless it is a truth, most important in education and government, that the influence of example is very great. I believe, and will insist upon it hereafter in these prolegomena, that we have come to overlook this element in our conduct of administration. It will be well if the study of the Chinese Classics should call attention to it. Yet in them the subject is pushed to an extreme, and represented in an extravagant manner. Proceeding from the view of human nature that it is entirely good, and led astray only by influences from without, the sage of China and his followers attribute to personal example and to instruction a power which we do not find that they actually possess.

7. The steps which precede the cultivation of the person are more briefly dealt with than those which we have just considered. 'The cultivation of the person results from the rectifying of the heart or mind 2.' True, but in the Great Learning very inadequately set forth.

'The rectifying of the mind is realised when the thoughts are made sincere.' And the thoughts are sincere, when no self-deception is allowed, and we move without effort to what is right and wrong, 'as we love what is beautiful, and as we dislike a bad smell! How are we to attain to this state? Here the Chinese moralist fails us. According to Chû Hsî's arrangement of the Treatise, there is only one sentence from which we can frame a reply to the above question. 'Therefore,' it is said, 'the superior man must be watchful over himself when he is alone?'. Following Chû's sixth chapter of commentary, and forming, we may say, part of it, we have in the old arrangement of the Great Learning all the passages which he has distributed so as to form the previous five chapters. But even from the examination of them, we do not obtain the information which we desire on this momentous inquiry.

8. Indeed, the more I study the Work, the more satisfied I become, that from the conclusion of what is now called the chapter of classical text to the sixth chapter of commentary, we have only a few fragments, which it is of no use trying to arrange, so as fairly to exhibit the plan of the author. According to his method, the chapter on the connexion between making the thoughts sincere and so rectifying the mental nature, should be preceded by one on the completion of knowledge as the means of making the thoughts sincere, and that again by one on the completion of knowledge by the investigation of things, or whatever else the phrase ko wa may mean. I am less concerned for the loss and injury which this part of the Work has suffered, because the subject of the connexion between intelligence and virtue is very fully exhibited in the Doctrine of the Mean, and will come under our notice in the review of that Treatise. The manner in which Chû Hsî has endeavoured to supply the blank about the perfecting of knowledge by the investigation of things is too extravagant. 'The Learning for Adults,' he says, 'at the outset of its lessons, instructs the learner, in regard to all things in the world, to proceed from what know-ledge he has of their principles, and pursue his investigation of them, till he reaches the extreme point. After exerting himself for a long time, he will suddenly find himself possessed of a wide and far-reaching penetration. Then, the qualities of all things, whether external or internal, the subtle or the coarse, will be apprehended, and the mind, in its entire substance and its relations to things, will be perfectly intelligent. This is called the investigation of things. This is called the perfection of knowledge. And knowledge must be thus perfected before we can achieve the sincerity of our thoughts, and the rectifying of our hearts!

Verily this would be learning not for adults only, but even Methuselahs would not be able to compass it. Yet for centuries this has been accepted as the orthodox exposition of the Classic. Lo Chung-fan does not express himself too strongly when he says that such language is altogether incoherent. The author would only be 'imposing on himself and others.'

- 9. The orthodox doctrine of China concerning the connexion between intelligence and virtue is most seriously erroneous, but I will not lay to the charge of the author of the Great Learning the wild representations of the commentator of our twelfth century, nor need I make here any remarks on what the doctrine really is. After the exhibition which I have given, my readers will probably conclude that the Work before us is far from developing, as Pauthier asserts, 'a system of social perfectionating which has never been equalled.'
- not to be sought in the severity of its logical processes, or the large-minded prosecution of any course of thought. We shall find them in the announcement of certain seminal principles, which, if recognised in government and the regulation of conduct, would conduce greatly to the happiness and virtue of mankind. I will conclude these observations by specifying four such principles.

First. The writer conceives nobly of the object of government, that it is to make its subjects happy and good. This may not be a sufficient account of that object, but it is much to have it so clearly laid down to 'all kings and governors,' that they are to love the people, ruling not for their own gratification but for the good of those over whom they are exalted by Heaven. Very important also is the statement that rulers have no divine right but what springs from the discharge of their duty. 'The decree does not always rest on them. Goodness obtains it, and the want of goodness loses it'.'

Second. The insisting on personal excellence in all who have authority in the family, the state, and the kingdom, is a great moral and social principle. The influence of such personal excellence may be overstated, but by the requirement of its cultivation the writer deserved well of his country.

Third. Still more important than the requirement of such excellence, is the principle that it must be rooted in the state of the heart, and be the natural outgrowth of internal sincerity. 'As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he.' This is the teaching alike of Solomon and the author of the Great Learning.

Fourth. I mention last the striking exhibition which we have of the golden rule, though only in its negative form:—'What a man dislikes in his superiors, let him not display in the treatment of his inferiors; what he dislikes in inferiors, let him not display in his service of his superiors; what he dislikes in those who are before him, let him not therewith precede those who are behind him; what he dislikes in those who are behind him, let him not therewith follow those who are before him; what he dislikes to receive on the right, let him not bestow on the left; what he dislikes to receive on the left, let him not bestow on the right. This is what is called the principle with which, as with a measuring square, to regulate one's conduct¹.'

The Work which contains those principles cannot be thought meanly of. They are 'commonplace,' as the writer in the Chinese Repository calls them, but they are at the same time eternal verities.

CHAPTER IV.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE MEAN.

SECTION I.

ITS PLACE IN THE LÎ CHÎ, AND ITS PUBLICATION SEPARATELY.

- I. The Doctrine of the Mean was one of the treatises which came to light in connexion with the labours of Liû Hsiang, and its place as the thirty-first Book in the Lî Chî was finally determined by Mâ Yung and Chăng Hsüan. In the translation of the Lî Chî in 'The Sacred Books of the East' it is the twenty-eighth Treatise.
- 2. But while it was thus made to form a part of the great collection of Treatises on Ceremonies, it maintained a separate footing of its own. In Liû Hsin's Catalogue of the Classical Works, we find 'Two p'ien of Observations on the Chung Yung'.' In the Records of the dynasty of Sûi (A.D. 589-618), in the chapter on the History of Literature², there are mentioned three Works on the Chung Yung;—the first called 'The Record of the Chung Yung,' in two chüan, attributed to Tâi Yung, a scholar who flourished about the middle of the fifth century; the second, 'A Paraphrase and Commentary on the Chung Yung,' attributed to the emperor Wû (A.D. 502-549) of the Liang dynasty, in one chüan; and the third, 'A Private Record, Determining the Meaning of the Chung Yung,' in five chüan, the author, or supposed author, of which is not mentioned².

It thus appears, that the Chung Yung had been published and commented on separately, long before the time of the Sung dynasty. The scholars of that, however, devoted special attention to it, the way being led by the famous Châu Lien-ch'i. He was followed by the two brothers Ch'ang, but neither of them published upon it. At last came Châ Hsî, who produced his Work called 中庸說二篇. 隋書,卷三十二,志第二十七,經籍,一,內本 禮記中庸傳,二卷,宋散騎常侍戴顧撰;中庸講疏,一卷,梁武帝撰;私記制旨中庸義,五卷. 周濂溪.

'The Chung Yung, in Chapters and Sentences',' which was made the text book of the Classic at the literary examinations, by the fourth emperor of the Yüan dynasty (A.D. 1312-1320), and from that time the name merely of the Treatise was retained in editions of the Li Chi. Neither text nor ancient commentary was given

Under the present dynasty it is not so. In the superb edition of 'The Three Lt Ching,' edited by numerous committees of scholars towards the middle of the Chien-lung reign, the Chung Yung is published in two parts, the ancient commentaries from 'The Thirteen Ching' being given side by side with those of Chû Hsî.

SECTION II.

ITS AUTHOR; AND SOME ACCOUNT OF HIM.

- 1. The composition of the Chung Yung is attributed to K'ung Chi, the grandson of Confucius. Chinese inquirers and critics are agreed on this point, and apparently on sufficient grounds. There is indeed no internal evidence in the Work to lead us to such a conclusion. Among the many quotations of Confucius's words and references to him, we might have expected to find some indication that the sage was the grandfather of the author, but nothing of the kind is given. The external evidence, however, or that from the testimony of authorities, is very strong. In Sze-mâ Ch'ien's Historical Records, published about B. C. 100, it is expressly said that 'Tsze-sze made the Chung Yung.' And we have a still stronger proof, a century earlier, from Tsze-sze's own descendant, K'ung Fû, whose words are, 'Tsze-sze compiled the Chung Yung in forty-nine p'ien's.' We may, therefore, accept the received account without hesitation.
- 2. As Chi, spoken of chiefly by his designation of Tsze-sze, thus occupies a distinguished place in the classical literature of China, it-may not be out of place to bring together here a few notices of him gathered from reliable sources.
- 中庸章句. "子思作中庸; see the 史記,四十七. 孔子世家. 'This K'ung Fû(孔鲋) was that descendant of Confucius, who hid several books in the wall of his house, on the issuing of the imperial edict for their burning. He was a writer himself, and his Works are referred to under the title of 孔養子. I have not seen them, but the statement given above is found in the 四書名餘說;—art.中庸.一孔叢子云,子思撰中庸之香,四十九篇.

He was the son of Lî, whose death took place B.C. 483, four years before that of the sage, his father. I have not found it recorded in what year he was born. Sze-må Ch'ien says he died at the age of 62. But this is evidently wrong, for we learn from Mencius that he was high in favour with the duke Mû of Lû¹, whose accession to that principality dates in B.C. 409, seventy years after the death of Confucius. In the 'Plates and Notices of the Worthies, sacrificed to in the Sage's Temples²,' it is supposed that the sixty-two in the Historical Records should be eighty-two². It is maintained by others that Tsze-sze's life was protracted beyond roo years⁴. This variety of opinions simply shows that the point cannot be positively determined. To me it seems that the conjecture in the Sacrificial Canon must be pretty near the truth⁵.

During the years of his boyhood, then, Tsze-sze must have been with his grandfather, and received his instructions. It is related, that one day, when he was alone with the sage, and heard him sighing, he went up to him, and, bowing twice, inquired the reason of his grief. 'Is it,' said he, 'because you think that your descendants, through not cultivating themselves, will be unworthy of you? Or is it that, in your admiration of the ways of Yao and Shun, you are vexed that you fall short of them?' 'Child,' replied Confucius, 'how is it that you know my thoughts?' 'I have often,' said Tsze-sze, 'heard from you the lesson, that when the father has gathered and prepared the firewood, if the son cannot carry the bundle, he is to be pronounced degenerate and unworthy. The remark comes frequently into my thoughts, and fills me with great apprehensions.' The sage was delighted. He smiled and said, 'Now, indeed, shall I be without anxiety! My undertakings will not come to nought. They will be carried on and flourish'.'

1 魯穆 (or 穆) 公. "聖廟祀典圖考. "或以六十二包八十二之談. Eighty-two and sixty-two may more easily be confounded, as written in Chinese, than with the Roman figures. "See the 四書集證, on the preface to the Chung Yung, 一年百餘歲卒. "Li himself was born in Confucius's twenty-first year, and if Teze-sze had been born in Li's twenty-first year, he must have been 103 at the time of duke Mû's accession. But the tradition is, that Transasse was a pupil of Tsäng Shän who was born E.C. 504. We must place his birth therefore considerably later, and suppose him to have been quite young when his father died. I was talking once about the question with a Chinese friend, who observed :—'Li was fifty when he died, and his wife married again into a family of Wei. We can hardly think, therefore, that she was anything like that age. Li could not have married so soon as his father did. Perhaps he was about forty when Chi was born.'

After the death of Confucius, Chi became a pupil, it is said, of the philosopher Tsang. But he received his instructions with discrimination, and in one instance which is recorded in the Li Chi, the pupil suddenly took the place of the master. We there read:— 'Tsang said to Tsze-sze, "Chi, when I was engaged in mourning for my parents, neither congee nor water entered my mouth for seven days." Tsze-sze answered, "In ordering their rules of propriety, it was the design of the ancient kings that those who would go beyond them should stoop and keep by them, and that those who could hardly reach them should stand on tiptoe to do so. Thus it is that the superior man, in mourning for his parents, when he has been three days without water or congee, takes a staff to enable himself to rise?."

While he thus condemned the severe discipline of Tsang, Tsze-sze appears, in various incidents which are related of him, to have been himself more than sufficiently ascetic. As he was living in great poverty, a friend supplied him with grain, which he readily received. Another friend was emboldened by this to send him a bottle of spirits, but he declined to receive it. 'You receive your corn from other people, urged the donor, and why should you decline my gift, which is of less value? You can assign no ground in reason for it, and if you wish to show your independence, you should do so completely.' 'I am so poor,' was the reply, 'as to be in want, and being afraid lest I should die and the sacrifices not be offered to my ancestors, I accept the grain as an alms. But the spirits and the dried flesh which you offer to me are the appliances of a feast. For a poor man to be feasting is certainly unreasonable. This is the ground of my refusing your gift. I have no thought of asserting my independence 3.'

To the same effect is the account of Tsze-sze, which we have from Liû Hsiang. That scholar relates:— When Chi was living in Wei, he wore a tattered coat, without any lining, and in thirty days had only nine meals. Tien Tsze-fang having heard of his distress, sent a messenger to him with a coat of fox-fur, and being afraid that he might not receive it, he added the message,—"When I borrow from a man, I forget it; when I give a thing, I part with it freely as if I threw it away." Tsze-sze declined the gift thus offered, and when Tsze-fang said, "I have, and you have not; why will you not take it?" he replied, "You give away as rashly as if you were casting your things into a ditch. Poor as I am, I cannot think of my body as a ditch, and do not presume to accept your gift'."

Taze-sze's mother married again, after Li's death, into a family of Wei. But this circumstance, which is not at all creditable in Chinese estimation, did not alienate his affections from her. He was in Lû when he heard of her death, and proceeded to weep in the temple of his family. A disciple came to him and said, 'Your mother married again into the family of the Shû, and do you weep for her in the temple of the K'ung?' 'I am wrong,' said Taze-sze, 'I am wrong;' and with these words he went to weep elsewhere.'

In his own married relation he does not seem to have been happy, and for some cause, which has not been transmitted to us, he divorced his wife, following in this, it has been wrongly said, the example of Confucius. On her death, her son, Tsze-shang, did not undertake any mourning for her. Tsze-sze's disciples were surprised and questioned him. 'Did your predecessor, a superior man,' they asked, 'mourn for his mother who had been divorced?' 'Yes,' was the reply. 'Then why do you not cause Pai' to mourn for his mother?' Tsze-sze answered, 'My progenitor, a superior man, failed in nothing to pursue the proper path. His observances increased or decreased as the case required. But I cannot attain to this. While she was my wife, she was Pai's mother; when she ceased to be my wife, she ceased to be Pai's mother.' The custom of the K'ung family not to mourn for a mother who had been divorced, took its rise from Tsze-sze'.

These few notices of K'ung Chi in his more private relations bring him before us as a man of strong feeling and strong will, independent, and with a tendency to asceticism in his habits.

As a public character, we find him at the ducal courts of Wei. Sung, Lû, and Pî, and at each of them held in high esteem by the rulers. To Wei he was carried probably by the fact of his mother having married into that State. We are told that the prince of Wei received him with great distinction and lodged him honourably. On one occasion he said to him, 'An officer of the State of Lû, you have not despised this small and narrow Wei, but have bent your steps hither to comfort and preserve it; -- vouchsafe to confer your benefits upon me.' Tsze-sze replied, 'If I should wish to requite your princely favour with money and silks, your treasuries are already full of them, and I am poor. If I should wish to requite it with good words, I am afraid that what I should say would not suit your ideas, so that I should speak in vain and not be listened to. The only way in which I can requite it, is by recommending to your notice men of worth.' The duke said, 'Men of worth are exactly what I desire.' 'Nay,' said Chi, 'you are not able to appreciate them.' 'Nevertheless,' was the reply, 'I should like to hear whom you consider deserving that name.' Tsze-sze replied, 'Do you wish to select your officers for the name they may have or for their reality?' 'For their reality, certainly,' said the duke. His guest then said, 'In the eastern borders of your State, there is one Li Yin, who is a man of real worth.' 'What were his grandfather and father?' asked the duke. 'They were husbandmen,' was the reply, on which the duke broke into a loud laugh, saying, 'I do not like husbandry. The son of a husbandman cannot be fit for me to employ. I do not put into office all the cadets of those families even in which office is hereditary.' Tsze-sze observed, 'I mention Li Yin because of his abilities; what has the fact of his forefathers being husbandmen to do with the case? And moreover, the duke of Chau was a great sage, and K'ang-shû was a great worthy. Yet if you examine their beginnings, you will find that from the business of husbandry they came forth to found their States. I did certainly have my doubts that in the selection of your officers you did not have regard to their real character and capacity.' With this the conversation ended. The duke was silent1.

Tsze-sze was naturally led to Sung, as the K'ung family originally sprang from that principality. One account, quoted in 'The ¹⁸⁰⁰ the 氏姓譜,卷一百二, 乳氏, 乳伋.

Four Books, Text and Commentary, with Proofs and Illustrations¹,' says that he went thither in his sixteenth year, and having foiled an officer of the State, named Yo So, in a conversation on the Shu Ching, his opponent was so irritated at the disgrace put on him by a youth, that he listened to the advice of evil counsellors, and made an attack on him to put him to death. The duke of Sung, hearing the tumult, hurried to the rescue, and when Chi found himself in safety, he said, 'When king Wan was imprisoned in Yû-lî, he made the Yî of Châu. My grandfather made the Ch'un Ch'iû after he had been in danger in Ch'an and Ts'âi. Shall I not make something when rescued from such a risk in Sung?' Upon this he made the Chung Yung in forty-nine pien.

According to this account, the Chung Yung was the work of Tsze-sze's early manhood, and the tradition has obtained a wonderful prevalence. The notice in 'The Sacrificial Canon' says, on the contrary, that it was the work of his old age, when he had finally settled in Lû, which is much more likely².

Of Tsze-sze in Pî, which could hardly be said to be out of Lû, we have only one short notice,—in Mencius, V. Pt. II. iii. 3, where the duke Hûi of Pî is introduced as saying, 'I treat Tsze-sze as my master.'

We have fuller accounts of him in Lû, where he spent all the latter years of his life, instructing his disciples to the number of several hundred³, and held in great reverence by the duke Mû. The duke indeed wanted to raise him to the highest office, but he declined this, and would only occupy the position of a 'guide, philosopher, and friend.' Of the attention which he demanded, however, instances will be found in Mencius, II. Pt. II. xi. 3; V. Pt. II. vi. 4, and vii. 4. In his intercourse with the duke he spoke the truth to him fearlessly. In the 'Cyclopædia of Surnames',' I find the following conversations, but I cannot tell from what source they are extracted into that Work.—'One day, the duke said to Tsze-sze, "The officer Hsien told me that you do good without

This is the Work so often referred to as the 四書集證, the full title being 四書經註集證. The passage here translated from it will be found in the place several times referred to in this section.

The author of the 四書名餘說 adopts the view that the Work was composed in Sung. Some have advocated this from ch. xxviii. 5, compared with Ana. III. ix, 'it being proper,' they say, 'that Ture-sae, writing in Sung, should not depreciate it as Confucius had done out of it!'

wishing for any praise from men;—is it so?" Tsze-sze replied, "No, that is not my feeling. When I cultivate what is good, I wish men to know it, for when they know it and praise me, I feel encouraged to be more zealous in the cultivation. This is what I desire, and am not able to obtain. If I cultivate what is good, and men do not know it, it is likely that in their ignorance they will speak evil of me. So by my good-doing I only come to be evil spoken of. This is what I do not desire, but am not able to avoid. In the case of a man, who gets up at cock-crowing to practise what is good and continues sedulous in the endeavour till midnight, and says at the same time that he does not wish men to know it, lest they should praise him, I must say of such a man, that, if he be not deceitful, he is stupid."

Another day, the duke asked Tsze-sze, saying, 'Can my state be made to flourish?' 'It may,' was the reply. 'And how?' Tsze-sze said, 'O prince, if you and your ministers will only strive to realise the government of the duke of Châu and of Po-ch'in; practising their transforming principles, sending forth wide the favours of your ducal house, and not letting advantages flow in private channels;—if you will thus conciliate the affections of the people, and at the same time cultivate friendly relations with neighbouring states, your state will soon begin to flourish.'

On one occasion, the duke asked whether it had been the custom of old for ministers to go into mourning for a prince whose service and state they had left. Tsze-sze replied to him, 'Of old, princes advanced their ministers to office according to propriety, and dismissed them in the same way, and hence there was that rule. But now-a-days, princes bring their ministers forward as if they were going to take them on their knees, and send them away as if they would cast them into an abyss. If they do not treat them as their greatest enemies, it is well.—How can you expect the ancient practice to be observed in such circumstances¹?'

These instances may suffice to illustrate the character of Tsze-sze, as it was displayed in his intercourse with the princes of his time. We see the same independence which he affected in private life, and a dignity not unbecoming the grandson of Confucius. But we miss the reach of thought and capacity for administration which belonged to the Sage. It is with him, how ever, as a thinker and writer that we have to do, and his rank in that capacity will appear from the examination of the Chung Yung in the section iv below. His place in the temples of the Sage has been that of one of his four assessors, since the year 1267. He ranks with Yen Hûi, Tsang Shan, and Mencius, and bears the title of 'The Philosopher Tsze-sze, Transmitter of the Sage'.'

SECTION III.

ITS INTEGRITY.

In the testimony of Kung Fû, which has been adduced to prove the authorship of the Chung Yung, it is said that the Work consisted originally of forty-nine pien. From this statement it is argued by some, that the arrangement of it in thirty-three chapters, which originated with Chû Hsî, is wrong²; but this does not affect the question of integrity, and the character pien is so vague and indefinite, that we cannot affirm that Kung Fû meant to tell us by it that Tsze-sze himself divided his Treatise into so many paragraphs or chapters.

It is on the entry in Liû Hsin's Catalogue, quoted section i,—
'Two p'ien of Observations on the Chung Yung,' that the integrity of the present Work is called in question. Yen Sze-kû, of the Tang dynasty, has a note on that entry to the effect:—'There is now the Chung Yung in the Lî Chî in one p'ien. But that is not the original Treatise here mentioned, but only a branch from it.'
Wang Wei, a writer of the Ming dynasty, says:—'Anciently, the Chung Yung consisted of two p'ien, as appears from the History of Literature of the Han dynasty, but in the Lî Chî we have only one p'ien, which Chû Hsî, when he made his "Chapters and Sentences," divided into thirty-three chapters. The old Work in two p'ien is not to be met with now.'

These views are based on a misinterpretation of the entry in the Catalogue. It does not speak of two pien of the Chung Yung, but of two pien of Observations thereon. The Great Learning carries on its front the evidence of being incomplete, but the student will not easily believe that the Doctrine of the Mean is so. I see no reason for calling its integrity in question, and no necessity therefore to recur to the ingenious device employed in the edition of the five ching published by the imperial authority of K'ang Hsî, to get over the difficulty which Wang Wei supposes. It there appears in two pien, of which we have the following account from the author of 'Supplemental Remarks upon the Four Books:'-'The proper course now is to consider the first twenty chapters in Chû Hsi's arrangement as making up the first pien, and the remaining thirteen as forming the second. In this way we retain the old form of the Treatise, and do not come into collision with the views of Chû. For this suggestion we are indebted to Lû Wang-châi' (an author of the Sung dynasty)1.

SECTION IV.

ITS SCOPE AND VALUE.

1. The Doctrine of the Mean is a work not easy to understand. 'It first,' says the philosopher Ch'ang, 'speaks of one principle; it next spreads this out and embraces all things; finally, it returns and gathers them up under the one principle. Unroll it, and it fills the universe; roll it up, and it retires and lies hid in secrecy?.' There is this advantage, however, to the student of it, that, more than most other Chinese Treatises, it has a beginning, a middle, and an end. The first chapter stands to all that follows in the character of a text, containing several propositions of which we have the expansion or development. If that development were satisfactory, we should be able to bring our own minds en rapport with that of the author. Unfortunately it is not so. As a writer he belongs to the intuitional school more than to the logical. This is well put in the 'Continuation of the General Examination of Literary Monuments and Learned Men,'-- The philosopher Tsang reached his conclusions by following in the train of things, watching and examining; whereas Tsze-sze proceeds directly and reaches to Heavenly virtue. His was a mysterious power of discernment, approaching to that of Yen Hûi'. We must take the Book and the author, however, as we have them, and get to their meaning, if we can, by assiduous examination and reflection.

2. 'Man has received his nature from Heaven. Conduct in accordance with that nature constitutes what is right and true,—is a pursuing of the proper Path. The cultivation or regulation of that path is what is called Instruction.' It is with these axioms that the Treatise commences, and from such an introduction we might expect that the writer would go on to unfold the various principles of duty, derived from an analysis of man's moral constitution.

Confining himself, however, to the second axiom, he proceeds to say that 'the path may not for an instant be left, and that the superior man is cautious and careful in reference to what he does not see, and fearful and apprehensive in reference to what he does not hear. There is nothing more visible than what is secret, and nothing more manifest than what is minute, and therefore the superior man is watchful over his aloneness.' This is not all very plain. Comparing it with the sixth chapter of Commentary in the Great Learning, it seems to inculcate what is there called 'making the thoughts sincere.' The passage contains an admonition about equivalent to that of Solomon,—'Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life.'

The next paragraph seems to speak of the nature and the path under other names. 'While there are no movements of pleasure, anger, sorrow, or joy, we have what may be called the state of equilibrium. When those feelings have been moved, and they all act in the due degree, we have what may be called the state of harmony. This equilibrium is the great root of the world, and this harmony is its universal path.' What is here called 'the state of equilibrium,' is the same as the nature given by Heaven, considered absolutely in itself, without deflection or inclination. This nature acted on from without, and responding with the various emotions, so as always 'to hit' the mark with entire correctness, produces the state of harmony, and such harmonious response is the path along which all human activities should proceed.

Finally. 'Let the states of equilibrium and harmony exist in perfection, and a happy order will prevail throughout heaven and earth, and all things will be nourished and flourish.' Here we pass into the sphere of mystery and mysticism. The language, according to Chû Hsî, 'describes the meritorious achievements and transforming influence of sage and spiritual men in their highest extent.' From the path of duty, where we tread on solid ground, the writer suddenly raises us aloft on wings of air, and will carry us we know not where, and to we know not what.

3. The paragraphs thus presented, and which constitute Chû Hal's first chapter, contain the sum of the whole Work. acknowledged by all; -by the critics who disown Chû Hsi's interpretations of it, as freely as by him1. Revolving them in my own mind often and long, I collect from them the following as the ideas of the author: Firstly, Man has received from Heaven a moral nature by which he is constituted a law to himself; secondly, Over this nature man requires to exercise a jealous watchfulness; and thirdly, As he possesses it, absolutely and relatively, in perfection, or attains to such possession of it, he becomes invested with the highest dignity and power, and may say to himself-'I am a god; yea, I sit in the seat of God.' I will not say here that there is impiety in the last of these ideas; but do we not have in them the same combination which we found in the Great Learning,—a combination of the ordinary and the extraordinary, the plain and the vague, which is very perplexing to the mind, and renders the Book unfit for the purposes of mental and moral discipline?

And here I may inquire whether we do right in calling the Treatise by any of the names which foreigners have hitherto used for it? In the note on the title, I have entered a little into this question. The Work is not at all what a reader must expect to find in what he supposes to be a treatise on 'The Golden Medium,' 'The Invariable Mean,' or 'The Doctrine of the Mean.' Those names are descriptive only of a portion of it. Where the phrase Chung Yung occurs in the quotations from Confucius, in nearly every chapter from the second to the eleventh, we do well to translate it by 'the course of the Mean,' or some similar terms; but the conception of it in Tsze-sze's mind was of a different kind, as the preceding analysis of the first chapter sufficiently shows.

4. I may return to this point of the proper title for the Work again, but in the meantime we must proceed with the analysis of it.—The ten chapters from the second to the eleventh constitute the second part, and in them Tsze-sze quotes the words of Confucius, 'for the purpose,' according to Chû Hsî, 'of illustrating the meaning of the first chapter.' Yet, as I have just intimated, they do not to my mind do this. Confucius bewails the rarity of the practice of the Mean, and graphically sets forth the difficulty of it. 'The empire, with its component States and families, may be ruled; dignities and emoluments may be declined; naked weapons may be trampled under foot; but the course of the Mean can not be attained to?.' 'The knowing go beyond it, and the stupid do not come up to it. Yet some have attained to it. Shun did so, humble and ever learning from people far inferior to himself4; and Yen Hûi did so, holding fast whatever good he got hold of, and never letting it gos. Tsze-lû thought the Mean could be taken by storm, but Confucius taught him better. And in fine, it is only the sage who can fully exemplify the Mean?.

All these citations do not throw any light on the ideas presented in the first chapter. On the contrary, they interrupt the train of thought. Instead of showing us how virtue, or the path of duty is in accordance with our Heaven-given nature, they lead us to think of it as a mean between two extremes. Each extreme may be a violation of the law of our nature, but that is not made to appear. Confucius's sayings would be in place in illustrating the doctrine of the Peripatetics, 'which placed all virtue in a medium between opposite vices.' Here in the Chung Yung of Taze-sze I have always felt them to be out of place.

5. In the twelfth chapter Tsze-sze speaks again himself, and we seem at once to know the voice. He begins by saying that 'the way of the superior man reaches far and wide, and yet is secret,' by which he means to tell us that the path of duty is to be pursued everywhere and at all times, while yet the secret spring and rule of it is near at hand, in the Heaven-conferred nature, the individual consciousness, with which no stranger can intermeddle. Chû Hsî, as will be seen in the notes, gives a different interpretation of the utterance. But the view which I have adopted is maintained convincingly by Mao Hsi-ho in the second part of his 'Observations on the Chung Yung.' With this chapter commences the third part of the Work, which embraces also the eight chapters which follow. 'It is designed,' says Chû Hsî, 'to illustrate what is said in the first chapter that "the path may not be left."' But more than that one sentence finds its illustration here. Tsze-sze had reference in it also to what he had said-'The superior man does not wait till he sees things to be cautious, nor till he hears things to be apprehensive. There is nothing more visible than what is secret, and nothing more manifest than what is minute. Therefore, the superior man is watchful over himself when he is alone.'

It is in this portion of the Chung Yung that we find a good deal of moral instruction which is really valuable. Most of it consists of sayings of Confucius, but the sentiments of Tsze-sze himself in his own language are interspersed with them. The sage of China has no higher utterances than those which are given in the thirteenth chapter.—'The path is not far from man. When men try to pursue a course which is far from the common indications of consciousness, this course cannot be considered the path. In the Book of Poetry it is said—

"In hewing an axe-handle, in hewing an axe-handle,
The pattern is not far off."

We grasp one axe-handle to hew the other, and yet if we look askance from the one to the other, we may consider them as apart. Therefore, the superior man governs men according to their nature, with what is proper to them; and as soon as they change what is wrong, he stops. When one cultivates to the utmost the moral principles of his nature, and exercises them on the principle of reciprocity, he is not far from the path. What you do not like when done to yourself, do not do to others.'

'In the way of the superior man there are four things, to none of which have I as yet attained.—To serve my father as I would require my son to serve me: to this I have not attained; to serve my elder brother as I would require my younger brother to serve me: to this I have not attained; to serve my ruler as I would require my minister to serve me: to this I have not attained; to set the example in behaving to a friend as I would require him to behave to me: to this I have not attained. Earnest in practising the ordinary virtues, and careful in speaking about them; if in his practice he has anything defective, the superior man dares not but exert himself; and if in his words he has any excess, he dares not allow himself such license. Thus his words have respect to his actions, and his actions have respect to his words;—is it not just an entire sincerity which marks the superior man?

We have here the golden rule in its negative form expressly propounded:—'What you do not like when done to yourself, do not do to others.' But in the paragraph which follows we have the rule virtually in its positive form. Confucius recognises the duty of taking the initiative,—of behaving himself to others in the first instance as he would that they should behave to him. There is a certain narrowness, indeed, in that the sphere of its operations seems to be confined to the relations of society, which are spoken of more at large in the twentieth chapter, but let us not grudge the tribute of our warm approbation to the sentiments.

This chapter is followed by two from Tsze-sze, to the effect that the superior man does what is proper in every change of his situation, always finding his rule in himself; and that in his practice there is an orderly advance from step to step,-from what is near to what is remote. Then follow five chapters from Confucius:—the first, on the operation and influence of spiritual beings, to show the manifestness of what is minute, and the irrepressibleness of sincerity; the second, on the filial piety of Shun, and how it was rewarded by Heaven with the throne, with enduring fame, and with long life; the third and fourth, on the kings Wan and Wû, and the duke of Chau, celebrating them for their filial piety and other associate virtues; and the fifth, on the subject of government. These chapters are interesting enough in themselves, but when I go back from them, and examine whether I have from them any better understanding of the paragraphs in the first chapter which they are said to illustrate, I do not find that I have. Three of them, the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth, would be more in place in the Classic of Filial Piety than, here in the Chung Yung. The meaning of the sixteenth is shadowy and undefined. After all the study which I have directed to it, there are some points in reference to which I have still doubts and difficulties.

The twentieth chapter, which concludes the third portion of the Work, contains a full exposition of Confucius's views on government, though professedly descriptive only of that of the kings Wan and Wû. Along with lessons proper for a ruler there are many also of universal application, but the mingling of them perplexes the mind. It tells us of 'the five duties of universal application,'- those between sovereign and minister, husband and wife, father and son, elder and younger brother, and friends; of 'the three virtues by which those duties are carried into effect, namely, knowledge, benevolence. and energy; and of 'the one thing, by which those virtues are practised, which is singleness or sincerity. It sets forth in detail the 'nine standard rules for the administration of government,' which are 'the cultivation by the ruler of his own character; the honouring men of virtue and talents; affection to his relatives; respect towards the great ministers; kind and considerate treatment of the whole body of officers; cherishing the mass of the people as children; encouraging all classes of artizans; indulgent treatment of men from a distance; and the kindly cherishing of the princes of the States 2. There are these and other equally interesting topics in this chapter; but, as they are in the Work, they distract the mind, instead of making the author's great object more clear to it, and I will not say more upon them here.

6. Doubtless it was the mention of 'singleness,' or 'sincerity,' in the twentieth chapter, which made Tsze-sze introduce it into this Treatise, for from those terms he is able to go on to develope what he intended in saying that 'if the states of Equilibrium and Harmony exist in perfection, a happy order will prevail throughout heaven and earth, and all things will be nourished and flourish.' It is here, that now we are astonished at the audacity of the writer's assertions, and now lost in vain endeavours to ascertain his meaning. I have quoted the words of Confucius that it is 'singleness' by which the three virtues of knowledge, benevolence, and energy are able to carry into practice the duties of universal obligation. He says also that it is this same 'singleness' by which 'the nine standard rules of government' can be effectively carried out. This 'singleness' is merely a name for 'the states of Equilibrium *1 Par. 8.

and Harmony existing in perfection.' It denotes a character absolutely and relatively good, wanting nothing in itself, and correct in all its outgoings. 'Sincerity' is another term for the same thing, and in speaking about it, Confucius makes a distinction between sincerity absolute and sincerity acquired. The former is born with some, and practised by them without any effort: the latter is attained by study, and practised by strong endeavour. The former is 'the way of Heaven;' the latter is 'the way of men?' 'He who possesses sincerity,'-absolutely, that is,-'is he who without effort hits what is right, and apprehends without the exercise of thought; he is the sage who naturally and easily embodies the right way. He who attains to sincerity, is he who chooses what is good and firmly holds it fast. And to this attainment there are requisite the extensive study of what is good, accurate inquiry about it, careful reflection on it, the clear discrimination of it, and the earnest practice of it 3.' In these passages Confucius unhesitatingly enunciates his belief that there are some men who are absolutely perfect, who come into the world as we might conceive the first man was, when he was created by God 'in His own image,' full of knowledge and righteousness, and who grow up as we know that Christ did, 'increasing in wisdom and in stature.' He disclaimed being considered to be such an one himself4, but the sages of China were such. And moreover, others who are not so naturally may make themselves to become so. Some will have to put forth more effort and to contend with greater struggles, but the end will be the possession of the knowledge and the achievement of the practice.

I need not say that these sentiments are contrary to the views of human nature which are presented in the Bible. The testimony of Revelation is that 'there is not a just man upon earth that doeth good and sinneth not.' 'If we say that we have no sin,' and in writing this term, I am thinking here not of sin against God, but, if we can conceive of it apart from that, of failures in regard to what ought to be in our regulation of ourselves, and in our behaviour to others;—'if we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us.' This language is appropriate in the lips of the learned as well as in those of the ignorant, to the highest sage as to the lowest child of the soil. Neither the scriptures of God nor the experience of man know of individuals absolutely perfect. The other sentiment that men can make themselves perfect is equally wide of the truth. Intelligence and goodness by no means stand to each other in the relation of cause and effect. The sayings of Ovid, 'Video meliora proboque, deteriora sequor,' 'Nitimur in vetitum semper, cupimusque negata,' are a more correct expression of the facts of human consciousness and conduct than the high-flown praises of Confucius.

7. But Tsze-sze adopts the dicta of his grandfather without questioning them, and gives them forth in his own style at the commencement of the fourth part of his Treatise. 'When we have intelligence resulting from sincerity, this condition is to be ascribed to nature; when we have sincerity resulting from intelligence, this condition is to be ascribed to instruction. But given the sincerity, and there shall be the intelligence; given the intelligence, and there shall be the sincerity.'

Tsze-sze does more than adopt the dicta of Confucius. He applies them in a way which the Sage never did, and which he would probably have shrunk from doing. The sincere, or perfect man of Confucius, is he who satisfies completely all the requirements of duty in the various relations of society, and in the exercise of government; but the sincere man of Tsze-sze is a potency in the universe. 'Able to give its full development to his own nature, he can do the same to the nature of other men. Able to give its full development to the nature of other men, he can give their full development to the natures of animals and things. Able to give their full development to the natures of creatures and things, he can assist the transforming and nourishing powers of Heaven and Earth. Able to assist the transforming and nourishing powers of Heaven and Earth, he may with Heaven and Earth form a ternion 2. Such are the results of sincerity natural. The case below this—of sincerity acquired, is as follows,—'The individual cultivates its shoots. From these he can attain to the possession of sincerity. This sincerity becomes apparent. From being apparent, it becomes manifest. From being manifest, it becomes brilliant. Brilliant, it affects others. Affecting others, they are changed by it. Changed by it, they are transformed. It is only he who is possessed of the most complete sincerity that can exist under heaven, who can transform. It may safely be affirmed, that when he thus expressed himself, Tsze-sze understood neither what he said nor whereof he affirmed. Mão Hsî-ho and some other modern writers explain away many of his predicates of sincerity, so that in their hands they become nothing but extravagant hyperboles, but the author himself would, I believe, have protested against such a mode of dealing with his words. True, his structures are castles in the air, but he had no idea himself that they were so.

In the twenty-fourth chapter there is a ridiculous descent from the sublimity of the two preceding. We are told that the possessor of entire sincerity is like a spirit and can foreknow, but the foreknowledge is only a judging by the milfoil and tortoise and other auguries! But the author recovers himself, and resumes his theme about sincerity as conducting to self-completion and the completion of other men and things, describing it also as possessing all the qualities which can be predicated of Heaven and Earth. Gradually the subject is made to converge to the person of Confucius, who is the ideal of the sage, as the sage is the ideal of humanity at large. An old account of the object of Tsze-sze in the Chung Yung is that he wrote it to celebrate the virtue of his grandfather. He certainly contrives to do this in the course of it. The thirtieth, thirty-first, and thirty-second chapters contain his eulogium, and never has any other mortal been exalted in such terms. 'He may be compared to heaven and earth in their supporting and containing, their overshadowing and curtaining all things; he may be compared to the four seasons in their alternating progress, and to the sun and moon in their successive shining.' 'Quick in apprehension, clear in discernment, of far-reaching intelligence, and all-embracing knowledge, he was fitted to exercise rule; magnanimous, generous, benign, and mild, he was fitted to exercise forbearance; impulsive, energetic, strong, and enduring, he was fitted to maintain a firm hold; self-adjusted, grave, never swerving from the Mean, and correct, he was fitted to command reverence; accomplished, distinctive, concentrative, and searching, he was fitted to exercise discrimination.' 'All-embracing and vast, he was like heaven; deep and active as a fountain, he was like the abyss.' 'Therefore his fame overspreads the Middle Kingdom, and extends to all barbarous tribes. Wherever ships and carriages reach; wherever the strength of man penetrates; wherever the heavens overshadow and the earth sustains; wherever the sun and moon shine; wherever frosts and dews fall;—all who have blood and breath unfeignedly honour and love him. Hence it is said,—He is the equal of Heaven!' 'Who can know him but he who is indeed quick in apprehension, clear in discernment, of far-reaching intelligence, and all-embracing knowledge, possessing all heavenly virtue?'

「唐陸德明釋文謂孔子之孫,子思,作此以昭明祖德;  the 中庸唐說一, ₽. I. •

- 8. We have arrived at the concluding chapter of the Work, in which the author, according to Chû Hsî, 'having carried his descriptions to the highest point in the preceding chapters, turns back and examines the source of his subject; and then again from the work of the learner, free from all selfishness and watchful over himself when he is alone, he carries out his description, till by easy steps he brings it to the consummation of the whole world tranquillized by simple and sincere reverentialness. He moreover eulogizes its mysteriousness, till he speaks of it at last as without sound or smell¹.' Between the first and last chapters there is a correspondency, and each of them may be considered as a summary of the whole treatise. The difference between them is, that in the first a commencement is made with the mention of Heaven as the conferrer of man's nature, while in this the progress of man in virtue is traced, step by step, till at last it is equal to that of High Heaven.
- 9. I have thus in the preceding paragraphs given a general and somewhat copious review of this Work. My object has been to seize, if I could, the train of thought and to hold it up to the reader. Minor objections to it, arising from the confused use of terms and singular applications of passages from the older Classics, are noticed in the notes subjoined to the translation I wished here that its scope should be seen, and the means be afforded of judging how far it is worthy of the high character attributed to it. 'The relish of it,' says the younger Ch'ang, 'is inexhaustible. The whole of it is solid learning. When the skilful reader has explored it with delight till he has apprehended it, he may carry it into practice all his life, and will find that it cannot be exhausted?'

My own opinion of it is less favourable. The names by which it has been called in translations of it have led to misconceptions of its character. Were it styled 'The states of Equilibrium and Harmony,' we should be prepared to expect something strange and probably extravagant. Assuredly we should expect nothing more strange or extravagant than what we have. It begins sufficiently well, but the author has hardly enunciated his preliminary apophthegms, when he conducts into an obscurity where we can hardly grope our way, and when we emerge from that, it is to be bewildered by his gorgeous but unsubstantial pictures of sagely perfection. He has eminently contributed to nourish the pride of his countrymen. He has exalted their sages above all that is called God or is worshipped, and taught the masses of the people that with them they have need of nothing from without. In the meantime it is antagonistic to Christianity. By-and-by, when Christianity has prevailed in China, men will refer to it as a striking proof how their fathers by their wisdom knew neither God nor themselves.

CHAPTER V.

CONFUCIUS AND HIS IMMEDIATE DISCIPLES.

SECTION I.

LIFE OF CONFUCIUS.

1. 'And have you foreigners surnames as well?' This question has often been put to me by Chinese. It marks the ignorance which belongs to the people of all that is external to themselves, and the pride of antiquity which enters largely as an element into their character. If such a pride could in any case be justified, we might allow it to the family of the K'ung, the descendants of Confucius. In the reign of K'ang-hsî, twenty-one centuries and a half after the death of the sage, they amounted to eleven thousand males. But their ancestry is carried back through a period of equal extent, and genealogical tables are common, in which the descent of Confucius is traced down from Hwang-ti, in whose reign the cycle was invented, B. C. 2637'.

The more moderate writers, however, content themselves with exhibiting his ancestry back to the commencement of the Châu dynasty, B.C. 1121. Among the relatives of the tyrant Châu, the last emperor of the Yin dynasty, was an elder brother, by a concubine, named Ch'12, who is celebrated by Confucius, Ana. XVIII. i, under the title of the viscount of Wei. Foreseeing the impending ruin of their family, Ch'1 withdrew from the court; and subsequently he was invested by the emperor Ch'ang, the second of the house of Châu, with the principality of Sung, which embraced the eastern portion of the present province of Ho-nan, that he might there continue the sacrifices to the sovereigns of Yin. Ch'1 was followed as duke of Sung by a younger brother, in whose line the succession continued. His great-grandson, the duke Min³, was followed, B.C. 908, by a younger brother, leaving, however, two sons, Fû-fû Ho¹ and Fang-sze². Fû Ho³ resigned his right to the dukedom in favour of Fang-sze, who put his uncle to death in B.C. 893, and became master of the State. He is known as the duke Iñ⁴, and to his elder brother belongs the honour of having the sage among his descendants.

Three descents from Fû Ho, we find Chang K'ao-fû⁵, who was a distinguished officer under the dukes Tâi, Wû, and Hsüan (B.C. 709-728). He is still celebrated for his humility, and for his literary tastes. We have accounts of him as being in communication with the Grand-historiographer of the kingdom, and engaged in researches about its ancient poetry, thus setting an example of one of the works to which Confucius gave himself. K'ao gave birth to K'ung-fû Chiâ⁸, from whom the surname of K'ung took its rise. Five generations had now elapsed since the dukedom was held in the direct line of his ancestry, and it was according to the rule in such cases that the branch should cease its connexion with the ducal stem, and merge among the people under a new surname. K'ung Chia was Master of the Horse in Sung, and an officer of wellknown loyalty and probity. Unfortunately for himself, he had a wife of surpassing beauty, of whom the chief minister of the State, by name Hwå Tû, happened on one occasion to get a glimpse. Determined to possess her, he commenced a series of intrigues, which ended, B.C. 710, in the murder of Chia and of the ruling duke Shang 10. At the same time, Tû secured the person of the lady, and hastened to his palace with the prize, but on the way she had strangled herself with her girdle.

An enmity was thus commenced between the two families of K'ung and Hwâ which the lapse of time did not obliterate, and the latter being the more powerful of the two, Chiâ's great-grandson withdrew into the State of Lû to avoid their persecution. There he was appointed commandant of the city of Fang¹¹, and is known in history by the name of Fang-shû!. Fang-shû gave birth to Po-hsiâ!, and from him came Shû-liang Hêh!, the father of Confucius. Hêh appears in the history of the times as a soldier of great prowess and daring bravery. In the year B.C. 562, when serving at the siege of a place called Pêh-yang!, a party of the assailants made their way in at a gate which had purposely been left open, and no sooner were they inside than the portcullis was dropped. Hêh was just entering; and catching the massive structure with both his hands, he gradually by dint of main strength raised it and held it up, till his friends had made their escape.

Thus much on the ancestry of the sage. Doubtless he could trace his descent in the way which has been indicated up to the imperial house of Yin, nor was there one among his ancestors during the rule of Châu to whom he could not refer with satisfaction. They had been ministers and soldiers of Sung and Lû, all men of worth, and in Chāng K'âo, both for his humility and literary researches, Confucius might have special complacency.

2. Confucius was the child of Shû-lîang Hêh's old age. soldier had married in early life, but his wife brought him only daughters,—to the number of nine, and no son. From his birth to his first public employments. a concubine he had a son, named Mang-p'i, and also Po-nis, who proved a cripple, so that, when he was over seventy years, Heh sought a second wife in the Yen family, from which came subsequently Yen Hui, the favourite disciple of his son. There were three daughters in the family, the youngest being named Chang-tsai7. Their father said to them, 'Here is the commandant of Tsau. His father and grandfather were only scholars, but his ancestors before them were descendants of the sage sovereigns. He is a man ten feet high, and of extraordinary prowess and I am very desirous of his alliance. Though he is old and austere, you need have no misgivings about him. Which of you three will be his wife?' The two elder daughters were silent, but Chang-tsai said, 'Why do you ask us, father? It is for you to determine.' 'Very well,' said her father in reply, 'you will do.' Chang-tsai, accordingly, became Heh's wife, and in due time gave birth to Confucius, who received the name of Ch'iû, and was subsequently styled Chung-nî¹. The event happened on the twenty-first day of the tenth month of the twenty-first year of the duke Hsiang, of Lû, being the twentieth year of the emperor Ling, B.C. 552 ². The birth-place was in the district of Tsâu ³, of which Hêh was the governor. It was somewhere within the limits of the present department of Yen-châu in Shan-tung, but the honour of being the exact spot is claimed for two places in two different districts of the department.

The notices which we have of Confucius's early years are very scanty. When he was in his third year his father died. It is related of him, that as a boy he used to play at the arrangement of

'名邱,字仲尾. The legends say that Chang-tsai, fearing lest she should not have a son, in consequence of her husband's age, privately ascended the Ni-ch'iù hill to pray for the boon, and that when she had obtained it, she commemorated the fact in the names-Ch'in and Chung-ni. But the cripple, Mang-p'i, had previously been styled Po-ni. There was some reason, previous to Confucius's birth, for using the term m in the family. As might be expected, the birth of the sage is surrounded with many prodigious occurrences. account is, that the husband and wife prayed together for a son in a dell of mount Nt. As Chang-tsai went up the hill, the leaves of the trees and plants all erected themselves, and bent downwards on her return. That night she dreamt the black Ti appeared, and said to her, 'You shall have a son, a sage, and you must bring him forth in a hollow mulberry tree.' One day during her pregnancy, she fell into a dreamy state, and saw five old men in the hall, who called themselves the essences of the five planets, and led an animal which looked like a small cow with one horn, and was covered with scales like a dragon. This creature knelt before Chang-tsai, and cast forth from its mouth a slip of jade, on which was the inscription, - 'The son of the essence of water shall succeed to the decaying Chau, and be a throneless king. Chang-tsai tied a piece of embroidered ribbon about its horn, and the vision disappeared. When Heh was told of it, he said, 'The creature must be the Ch'I-lin.' As her time drew near, Chang-tsai asked her husband if there was any place in the neighbourhood called 'the hollow mulberry tree.' He told her there was a dry cave in the south hill, which went by that name. Then she said, 'I will go and be confined there.' Her husband was surprised, but when made acquainted with her former dream, he made the necessary arrangements. On the night when the child was born, two dragons came and kept watch on the left and right of the hill, and two spirit-ladies appeared in the air, pouring out fragrant odours, as if to bathe Chang-tsai; and as soon as the birth took place, a spring of clear warm water bubbled up from the floor of the cave, which dried up again when the child had been washed in it. The child was of an extraordinary appearance; with a mouth like the sea, ox lips, a dragon's back, &c. &c. On the top of his head was a remarkable formation, in consequence of which he was named Ch'iû, &c. See the 列 國 志, Bk. lxxviii.—Sze-mā Ch'ien seems to make Confucius to have been illegitimate, saying that Hêh and Miss Yen cohabited in the wilder-Chiang Yung says that the phrase has reference simply to the disparity ness (野 合). of their ages.

Sze-mā Ch'ien says that Confucius was born in the twenty-second year of duke Hsiang.

3.C. 550. He is followed by Chû Hsî in the short sketch of Confucius's life prefixed to the Lun Yü, and by 'The Annals of the Empire' (

(To this latter work I have generally referred for my dates.) The year assigned in the text above rests on the authority of Kû-liang and Kung-yang, the two commentators on the Ch'un-Ch'iû. With regard to the month, however, the tenth is that assigned by Kû-liang, while Kung-yang names the eleventh.

sacrificial vessels, and at postures of ceremony. Of his schooling we have no reliable account. There is a legend, indeed, that at seven he went to school to Yen P'ing-chung¹, but it must be rejected as P'ing-chung belonged to the State of Ch'î. He tells us himself that at fifteen he bent his mind to learning²; but the condition of the family was one of poverty. At a subsequent period, when people were astonished at the variety of his knowledge, he explained it by saying, 'When I was young, my condition was low, and therefore I acquired my ability in many things; but they were mean matters³.'

When he was nineteen, he married a lady from the State of Sung, of the Chien-kwan family, and in the following year his son Li was born. On the occasion of this event, the duke Châo sent him a present of a couple of carp. It was to signify his sense of his prince's favour, that he called his son Li (The Carp), and afterwards gave him the designation of Po-yü (Fish Primus). No mention is made of the birth of any other children, though we know, from Ana. V. i, that he had at least one daughter. We know also, from an inscription on her grave, that he had one other daughter, who died when she was quite young. The fact of the duke of Lû's sending him a gift on the occasion of Lû's birth, shows that he was not unknown, but was already commanding public attention and the respect of the great.

It was about this time, probably in the year after his marriage, that Confucius took his first public employment, as keeper of the stores of grain's, and in the following year he was put in charge of the public fields and lands? Mencius adduces these employments in illustration of his doctrine that the superior man may at times take office on account of his poverty, but must confine himself in such a case to places of small emolument, and aim at nothing but the discharge of their humble duties. According to him, Confucius, as keeper of stores, said, 'My calculations must all be right:—that is all I have to care about;' and when in charge of the public fields, he said, 'The oxen and sheep must be fat and strong and superior:—that is all I have to care about.' It does not appear whether these offices were held by Confucius in the direct employment of the State, or as a dependent of the Chi family in whose jurisdiction he lived. The present of the carp from the duke may incline us to suppose the former.

[&]quot;晏平仲. 'Ana. II. iv. 'Ana. IX. vi. '娶宋之开官氏. '名曰鲤,而字伯魚. '為委吏. This is Mencius's account. See-må Ch'ien says 皆為季氏吏, but his subsequent words 料量平 show that the office was the same. 'Mencius calls this office 乘'田, while Sze-må Ch'ien says 為司敬吏.

3. In his twenty-second year, Confucius commenced his labours as a public teacher, and his house became a resort for young and inquiring spirits, who wished to learn the doctrines of antiquity.

Commencement of his labours as a teacher. The death of his mother.

B. C. 531-527.

However small the fee his pupils were able to afford, he never refused his instructions. All that he required, was an ardent desire for improvement, and some degree of capacity. 'I do not open up the truth,' he said, 'to one who is not eager to get knowledge, nor help out any one who is not anxious to explain himself. When I have presented one corner of a subject to any one, and he cannot from it learn the other three, I do not repeat my lesson 3."

His mother died in the year B.C. 527, and he resolved that her body should lie in the same grave with that of his father, and that their common resting-place should be in Fang, the first home of the K'ung in Lû. But here a difficulty presented itself. His father's coffin had been for twenty years where it had first been deposited, off the road of The Five Fathers, in the vicinity of Tsau :- would it be right in him to move it? He was relieved from this perplexity by an old woman of the neighbourhood, who told him that the coffin had only just been put into the ground, as a temporary arrangement, and not regularly buried. On learning this, he carried his purpose into execution. Both coffins were conveyed to Fang, and put in the ground together, with no intervening space between them, as was the custom in some States. And now came a new perplexity. He said to himself, 'In old times, they had graves, but raised no tumulus over them. But I am a man, who belongs equally to the north and the south, the east and the west. I must have something by which I can remember the place.' Accordingly he raised a mound, four feet high, over the grave, and returned home, leaving a party of his disciples to see everything properly completed. In the meantime there came on a heavy storm of rain, and it was a considerable time before the disciples joined him. 'What makes you so late?' he asked. 'The grave in Fang fell down,' they said. He made no reply, and they repeated their answer three times, when he burst into tears, and said, 'Ah! they did not make their graves so in antiquity'.'

Confucius mourned for his mother the regular period of three years,—three years nominally, but in fact only twenty-seven months. Five days after the mourning was expired, he played on his lute, but could not sing. It required other five days before he could accompany an instrument with his voice².

Some writers have represented Confucius as teaching his disciples important lessons from the manner in which he buried his mother, and having a design to correct irregularities in the ordinary funeral ceremonies of the time. These things are altogether 'without book.' We simply have a dutiful son paying the last tribute of affection to a good parent. In one point he departs from the ancient practice, raising a mound over the grave, and when the fresh earth gives way from a sudden rain, he is moved to tears, and seems to regret his innovation. This sets Confucius vividly before us,—a man of the past as much as of the present, whose own natural feelings were liable to be hampered in their development by the traditions of antiquity which he considered sacred. It is important, however, to observe the reason which he gave for rearing the mound. He had in it a presentiment of much of his future course. He was 'a man of the north, the south, the east, and the west.' He might not confine himself to any one State. He would travel, and his way might be directed to some 'wise ruler,' whom his counsels would conduct to a benevolent sway that would break forth on every side till it transformed the empire.

4. When the mourning for his mother was over, Confucius remained in Lû, but in what special capacity we do not know.

He learns music; visits the court of Chau; and returns to La.

a. c. 526-517.

Probably he continued to encourage the resort of inquirers to whom he communicated instruction, and pursued his own researches into the history, literature, and institutions of the empire. In the year B.C. 525, the chief of the small State of Tan 3, made his appearance at the court of Lû, and discoursed in a wonderful manner, at a feast given to him by the duke, about the names which the most ancient sovereigns, from Hwang-ti downwards, gave to their ministers. The sacrifices to the emperor Shao-hao, the next in descent from Hwang-ti, were maintained in T'an, so that the chief fancied that he knew all about the abstruse subject on which he discoursed. Confucius, hearing about the matter, waited on the visitor, and learned from him all that he had to communicate.

To the year B.C. 525, when Confucius was twenty-nine years old, is referred his studying music under a famous master of the name of Hsiang². He was approaching his thirtieth year when, as he tells us, 'he stood³' firm, that is, in his convictions on the subjects of learning to which he had bent his mind fifteen years before. Five years more, however, were still to pass by, before the anticipation mentioned in the conclusion of the last paragraph began to receive its fulfilment⁴, though we may conclude from the way in which it was brought about that he was growing all the time in the estimation of the thinking minds in his native State.

In the twenty-fourth year of duke Châo, B.C. 518, one of the principal ministers of Lû, known by the name of Mang Hsî, died. Seventeen years before, he had painfully felt his ignorance of ceremonial observances, and had made it his subsequent business to make himself acquainted with them. On his deathbed, he addressed his chief officer, saying, 'A knowledge of propriety is the stem of a man. Without it he has no means of standing firm. I have heard that there is one K'ung Ch'iû, who is thoroughly versed in it. He is a descendant of sages, and though the line of his family was extinguished in Sung, among his ancestors there were Fû-fû Ho, who resigned the State to his brother, and Chang K'âo-fû, who was distinguished for his humility. Tsang Hêh has observed that if sage men of intelligent virtue do not attain to eminence, distinguished men are sure to appear among their posterity. His words are now to be verified, I think, in K'ung Ch'iû. After my death, you must from the 左氏傳 upon the subject.

This rests on the respectable authority of Tso Ch'iù-ming's annotations on the Ch'un Ch'iù, but I must consider it apocryphal. The legend-writers have fishioned a journey to Tan. The slightest historical intimation becomes a text with them, on which they enlarge to the glory of the sage. Amiot has reproduced and expanded their r mancings, and others, such as Pauthier (Chine, pp. 121-183) and Thornton (History of China, vol. i. pp. 151-215), have followed in his wake.

See the 'Narratives of the School,' art. in the chier of Tan's expositions.

Ana. II. iv. The journey to Châu is placed by Sze-mâ Ch'ien before Confucius's holding of his first official employments, and Chû Hsi and most other writers follow him It is a great error, and arisen from a misunderstanding of the passage tell Ho-chi to go and study proprieties under him¹.' In consequence of this charge, Ho-chi², Mang Hsi's son, who appears in the Analects under the name of Mang 1³, and a brother, or perhaps only a near relative, named Nan-kung Chang-shû⁴, became disciples of Confucius. Their wealth and standing in the State gave him a position which he had not had before, and he told Chang-shû of a wish which he had to visit the court of Châu, and especially to confer on the subject of ceremonies and music with Lâo Tan. Chang-shû represented the matter to the duke Ch'âo, who put a carriage and a pair of horses at Confucius's disposal for the expedition⁵.

At this time the court of Chau was in the city of Los, in the present department of Ho-nan of the province of the same name. The reigning sovereign is known by the title of Chang⁷, but the sovereignty was little more than nominal. The state of China was then analogous to that of one of the European kingdoms during the prevalence of the feudal system. At the commencement of the dynasty, the various states of the kingdom had been assigned to the relatives and adherents of the reigning family. There were thirteen principalities of greater note, and a large number of smaller dependencies. During the vigorous youth of the dynasty, the sovereign or lord paramount exercised an effective control over the various chiefs, but with the lapse of time there came weakness and decay. The chiefs-corresponding somewhat to the European dukes, earls, marquises, barons, &c .-- quarrelled and warred among themselves, and the stronger among them barely acknowledged their subjection to the sovereign. A similar condition of things prevailed in each particular State. There there were hereditary ministerial families, who were continually encroaching on the authority of their rulers, and the heads of those families again were frequently hard pressed by their inferior officers. Such was the state of China in Confucius's time. The reader must have it clearly before him, if he would understand the position of the sage, and the reforms which, we shall find, it was subsequently his object to introduce.

Arrived at Chau, he had no intercourse with the court or any of the principal ministers. He was there not as a politician, but as an inquirer about the ceremonies and maxims of the founders of the existing dynasty. Lâo Tan 1, whom he had wished to see, generally acknowledged as the founder of the Taoists, or Rationalistic sect (so called), which has maintained its ground in opposition to the followers of Confucius, was then a curator of the royal library. They met and freely interchanged their views, but no reliable account of their conversations has been preserved. In the fifth Book of the Li Chi, which is headed 'The philosopher Tsang asked,' Confucius refers four times to the views of Lao-taze on certain points of funeral ceremonies, and in the 'Narratives of the School,' Book XXIV, he tells Chi K'ang what he had heard from him about 'The Five Tis,' but we may hope their conversation turned also on more important subjects. Sze-mâ Ch'ien, favourable to Lao-tsze, makes him lecture his visitor in the following style:- 'Those whom you talk about are dead, and their bones are mouldered to dust; only their words remain. When the superior man gets his time, he mounts aloft; but when the time is against him, he moves as if his feet were entangled. I have heard that a good merchant, though he has rich treasures deeply stored, appears as if he were poor, and that the superior man whose virtue is complete, is yet to outward seeming stupid. Put away your proud air and many desires, your insinuating habit and wild will? These are of no advantage to you. This is all which I have to tell you.' On the other hand, Confucius is made to say to his disciples, 'I know how birds can fly, how fishes can swim, and how animals can run. But the runner may be snared, the swimmer may be hooked, and the flyer may be shot by the But there is the dragon. I cannot tell how he mounts on the wind through the clouds, and rises to heaven. I have seen Lao-tsze, and can only compare him to the dragon 3.

While at Lo, Confucius walked over the grounds set apart for the great sacrifices to Heaven and Earth; inspected the pattern of the Hall of Light, built to give audience in to the princes of the kingdom; and examined all the arrangements of the ancestral temple and the court. From the whole he received a profound impression. 'Now,' said he with a sigh, 'I know the sage wisdom of the duke of Chau, and how the House of Chau attained to the royal sway! On the walls of the Hall of Light were paintings of the ancient sovereigns from Yao and Shun downwards, their characters appearing in the representations of them, and words of praise or warning being appended. There was also a picture of the duke of Chau sitting with his infant nephew, the king Ch'ang. upon his knees, to give audience to all the princes. Confucius surveyed the scene with silent delight, and then said to his followers, 'Here you see how Châu became so great. As we use a glass to examine the forms of things, so must we study antiquity in order to understand the present time? In the hall of the ancestral temple, there was a metal statue of a man with three clasps upon his mouth, and his back covered over with an enjoyable homily on the duty of keeping a watch upon the lips. Confucius turned to his disciples and said, 'Observe it, my children. These words are true, and commend themselves to our feelings 3.'

About music he made inquiries at Ch'ang Hung, to whom the following remarks are attributed:—'I have observed about Chungni many marks of a sage. He has river eyes and a dragon forehead,—the very characteristics of Hwang-ti. His arms are long, his back is like a tortoise, and he is nine feet six inches in height,—the very semblance of T'ang the Completer. When he speaks, he praises the ancient kings. He moves along the path of humility and courtesy. He has heard of every subject, and retains with a strong memory. His knowledge of things seems inexhaustible.—Have we not in him the rising of a sage 4?'

I have given these notices of Confucius at the court of Châu, more as being the only ones I could find, than because I put much faith in them. He did not remain there long, but returned the same year to Lû, and continued his work of teaching. His fame was greatly increased; disciples came to him from different parts, till their number amounted to three thousand. Several of those who have come down to us as the most distinguished among his followers, however, were yet unborn, and the statement just given may be considered as an exaggeration. We are not to conceive of the disciples as forming a community, and living together. Parties of them may have done so. We shall find Confucius hereafter always moving amid a company of admiring pupils; but the greater number must have had their proper avocations and ways of living, and would only resort to the Master, when they wished specially to ask his counsel or to learn of him.

5. In the year succeeding the return to Lû, that State fell into great confusion. There were three Families in it, all connected irregularly with the ducal House, which had long kept the rulers in a condition of dependency. Thither Confucius also repaired, that he might avoid the prevailing disorder of his native State. Ch'1 was then under the government of a ruler (in rank a marquis, but historically called duke), afterwards styled Ching 2, who 'had a thousand teams, each of four horses, but on the day of his death the people did not praise him for a single virtue 3. His chief minister, however, was Yen Ying 4, a man of considerable ability and worth. At his court the music of the ancient sage-emperor, Shun, originally brought to Ch'i from the State of Ch'an 5, was still preserved.

According to the 'Narratives of the School,' an incident occurred on the way to Ch'î, which I may transfer to these pages as a good specimen of the way in which Confucius turned occurring matters to account, in his intercourse with his disciples. As he was passing by the side of the Tâi mountain, there was a woman weeping and wailing by a grave. Confucius bent forward in his carriage, and after listening to her for some time, sent Tsze-lû to ask the cause of her grief. 'You weep, as if you had experienced sorrow upon sorrow,' said Tsze-lû. The woman replied, 'It is so. My husband's father was killed here by a tiger, and my husband also; and now my son has met the same fate.' Confucius asked her why she did not remove from the place, and on her answering, 'There is here no oppressive government,' he turned to his disciples, and said, 'My children, remember this. Oppressive government is fiercer than a tiger '.'

As soon as he crossed the border from Lû, we are told he discovered from the gait and manners of a boy, whom he saw carrying a pitcher, the influence of the sages' music, and told the driver of his carriage to hurry on to the capital². Arrived there, he heard the strain, and was so ravished with it, that for three months he did not know the taste of flesh. 'I did not think,' he said, 'that music could have been made so excellent as this³.' The duke Ching was pleased with the conferences which he had with him⁴, and proposed to assign to him the town of Lin-ch'iû, from the revenues of which he might derive a sufficient support; but Confucius refused the gift, and said to his disciples, 'A superior man will only receive reward for services which he has done. I have given advice to the duke Ching, but he has not yet obeyed it, and now he would endow me with this place! Very far is he from understanding me⁵!'

On one occasion the duke asked about government, and received the characteristic reply, 'There is government when the ruler is ruler, and the minister is minister; when the father is father, and the son is son 6.' I say that the reply is characteristic. Once, when Tsze-lû asked him what he would consider the first thing to be done if entrusted with the government of a State, Confucius answered, 'What is necessary is to rectify names'.' The disciple thought the reply wide of the mark, but it was substantially the same with what he said to the marquis Ching. There is a sufficient foundation in nature for government in the several relations of society, and if those be maintained and developed according to their relative significancy, it is sure to obtain. This was a first principle in the political ethics of Confucius.

Another day the duke got to a similar inquiry the reply that the art of government lay in an economical use of the revenues; and being pleased, he resumed his purpose of retaining the philosopher in his State, and proposed to assign to him the fields of Ni-ch'i. His chief minister Yen Ying dissuaded him from the purpose, saying, 'Those scholars are impracticable, and cannot be imitated. They are haughty and conceited of their own views, so that they will not be content in inferior positions. They set a high value on all funeral ceremonies, give way to their grief, and will waste their property on great burials, so that they would only be injurious to the common manners. This Mr. K'ung has a thousand peculiarities. It would take generations to exhaust all that he knows about the ceremonies of going up and going down. This is not the time to examine into his rules of propriety. If you, prince, wish to employ him to change the customs of Ch'i, you will not be making the people your primary consideration 1.'

I had rather believe that these were not the words of Yen Ying, but they must represent pretty correctly the sentiments of many of the statesmen of the time about Confucius. The duke of Ch's got tired ere long of having such a monitor about him, and observed, 'I cannot treat him as I would the chief of the Ch's family. I will treat him in a way between that accorded to the chief of the Ch's, and that given to the chief of the Mang family.' Finally he said, 'I am old; I cannot use his doctrines'.' These observations were made directly to Confucius, or came to his hearing's. It was not consistent with his self-respect to remain longer in Ch's, and he returned to LA'.

6. Returned to Lû, he remained for the long period of about fifteen years without being engaged in any official employment. It He remains was a time, indeed, of great disorder. The duke Châo continued a refugee in Ch'i, the government being in the hands of the great Families, up to his death in B.C. 510, on which event the rightful heir was set aside, and another member of the ducal House, known to us by the title of Ting 5, substituted in his place. The ruling authority of the principality became thus still more enfeebled than it had been before, and, on the other hand, the chiefs of the Chî, the Shû, and the Mang, could hardly keep their ground against their own officers. Of those latter, the two most conspicuous were Yang Hû 6, called also Yang Ho 7, and

Kung-shan Fû-zâo 1. At one time Chi Hwan, the most powerful of the chiefs, was kept a prisoner by Yang Hû, and was obliged to make terms with him in order to obtain his liberation. Confucius would give his countenance to none, as he disapproved of all, and he studiously kept aloof from them. Of how he comported himself among them we have a specimen in the incident related in the Analects, XVII. i.—'Yang Ho wished to see Confucius, but Confucius would not go to see him. On this, he sent a present of a pig to Confucius, who, having chosen a time when Ho was not at home, went to pay his respects for the gift. He met him, however, on the way. "Come, let me speak with you," said the officer. "Can he be called benevolent, who keeps his jewel in his bosom, and leaves his country to confusion?" Confucius replied, "No." "Can he be called wise, who is anxious to be engaged in public employment, and yet is constantly losing the opportunity of being so?" Confucius again said, "No." The other added, "The days and months are passing away; the years do not wait for us." Confucius said, "Right; I will go into office."' Chinese writers are eloquent in their praises of the sage for the combination of propriety, complaisance and firmness, which they see in his behaviour in this matter. To myself there seems nothing remarkable in it but a somewhat questionable dexterity. But it was well for the fame of Confucius that his time was not occupied during those years with official services. He turned them to better account, prosecuting his researches into the poetry, history, ceremonies, and music of the nation. Many disciples continued to resort to him, and the legendary writers tell us how he employed their services in digesting the results of his studies. I must repeat, however, that several of them, whose names are most famous, such as Tsang Shan, were as yet children, and Min Sun 2 was not born till B. C. 500.

To this period we must refer the almost single instance which we have of the manner of Confucius's intercourse with his son Li. 'Have you heard any lessons from your father different from what we have all heard?' asked one of the disciples once of Li. 'No,' said Li. 'He was standing alone once, when I was passing through the court below with hasty steps, and said to me, "Have you learned the Odes?" On my replying, "Not yet," he added, "If you do not learn the Odes, you will not be fit to converse with." Another day, in the same place and the same way, he said to me, "Have you read the rules of Propriety?" On my replying, "Not yet," he added, "If you do not learn the rules of Propriety, your character cannot be established." I have heard only these two things from him.' The disciple was delighted and observed, 'I asked one thing, and I have got three things. I have heard about the Odes. I have heard about the rules of Propriety. I have also heard that the superior man maintains a distant reserve towards his son '.'

I can easily believe that this distant reserve was the rule which Confucius followed generally in his treatment of his son. A stern dignity is the quality which a father has to maintain upon his system. It is not to be without the element of kindness, but that must never go beyond the line of propriety. There is too little room left for the play and development of natural affection.

The divorce of his wife must also have taken place during these years, if it ever took place at all, which is a disputed point. The curious reader will find the question discussed in the notes on the second Book of the Li Chi. The evidence inclines, I think, against the supposition that Confucius did put his wife away. When she died, at a period subsequent to the present, Li kept on weeping aloud for her after the period for such a demonstration of grief had expired, when Confucius sent a message to him that his sorrow must be subdued, and the obedient son dried his tears. We are glad to know that on one occasion—the death of his favourite disciple, Yen Hûi—the tears of Confucius himself would flow over and above the measure of propriety.

7. We come to the short period of Confucius's official life. In the He holds office. year B. C. 501, things had come to a head between the chiefs of the three Families and their ministers, and had resulted in the defeat of the latter. In that year the resources of Yang Hû were exhausted, and he fled into Ch'i, so that the State was delivered from its greatest troubler, and the way was made more clear for Confucius to go into office, should an opportunity occur. It soon presented itself. Towards the end of that year he was made chief magistrate of the town of Chung-tû.

¹ Ana. XVI. xiii. 2 See the Li Chi, II. Pt. I. i. 27. 2 Ana. XI. ix. 4 Amiot says this was 'la ville même où le Souverain tenoit sa Cour' (Vie de Confucius, p. 147). He is followed of course by Thornton and Pauthier. My reading has not shown me that such was the case. In the notes to K'ang-hsi's edition of the 'Five Ching,' Li Chi, II. Sect. I. iii. 4, it is simply said—'Chung-tû,—the name of a town of Lû. It afterwards belonged to Ch'i when it was called Ping-lû ().

Just before he received this appointment, a circumstance occurred of which we do not well know what to make. When Yang-hû fled into Ch'i, Kung-shan Fû-zho, who had been confederate with him. continued to maintain an attitude of rebellion, and held the city of Pi against the Chi family. Thence he sent a message to Confucius inviting him to join him, and the Sage seemed so inclined to go that his disciple Tsze-lû remonstrated with him, saying, 'Indeed you cannot go! why must you think of going to see Kung-shan?' Confucius replied, 'Can it be without some reason that he has invited me? If any one employ me, may I not make an eastern Châu 1?' The upshot, however, was that he did not go, and I cannot suppose that he had ever any serious intention of doing so. Amid the general gravity of his intercourse with his followers, there gleam out a few instances of quiet pleasantry, when he amused himself by playing with their notions about him. This was probably one of them.

As magistrate of Chung-tû he produced a marvellous reformation of the manners of the people in a short time. According to the 'Narratives of the School,' he enacted rules for the nourishing of the living and all observances to the dead. Different food was assigned to the old and the young, and different burdens to the strong and the weak. Males and females kept apart from each other in the streets. A thing dropped on the road was not picked up. There was no fraudulent carving of vessels. Inner coffins were made four inches thick, and the outer ones five. Graves were made on the high grounds, no mounds being raised over them, and no trees planted about them. Within twelve months, the princes of the other States all wished to imitate his style of administration?

The duke Ting, surprised at what he saw, asked whether his rules could be employed to govern a whole State, and Confucius told him that they might be applied to the whole kingdom. On this the duke appointed him assistant-superintendent of Works, in which capacity he surveyed the lands of the State, and made many improvements in agriculture. From this he was quickly made minister of Crime, and the appointment was enough to put an end to crime. There was no necessity to put the penal laws in execution. No offenders showed themselves.

'Ana. XVII. v. '家語, Bk. I. '司 堂. This office, however, was held by the chief of the Mang family. We must understand that Confucius was only an assistant to him, or perhaps acted for him. '大司宠. '家語, Bk. L.

These indiscriminating eulogies are of little value. One incident, related in the annotations of Tso-shih on the Ch'un-Ch'iû 1, commends itself at once to our belief, as in harmony with Confucius's character. The chief of the Chi, pursuing with his enmity the duke Chao, even after his death, had placed his grave apart from the graves of his predecessors; and Confucius surrounded the ducal cemetery with a ditch so as to include the solitary resting-place, boldly telling the chief that he did it to hide his disloyalty. But he signalised himself most of all in B. C. 500, by his behaviour at an interview between the dukes of Lû and Ch'i, at a place called Shihch'13, and Chiâ-kû4, in the present district of Lâi-wû, in the department of T'ai-an 5. Confucius was present as master of ceremonies on the part of Lû, and the meeting was professedly pacific. The two princes were to form a covenant of alliance. The principal officer on the part of Ch'i, however, despising Confucius as 'a man of ceremonies, without courage,' had advised his sovereign to make the duke of Lû a prisoner, and for this purpose a band of the halfsavage original inhabitants of the place advanced with weapons to the stage where the two dukes were met. Confucius understood the scheme, and said to the opposite party, 'Our two princes are met for a pacific object. For you to bring a band of savage vassals to disturb the meeting with their weapons, is not the way in which Ch'i can expect to give law to the princes of the kingdom. These barbarians have nothing to do with our Great Flowery land. Such vassals may not interfere with our covenant. Weapons are out of place at such a meeting. As before the spirits, such conduct is unpropitious. In point of virtue, it is contrary to right. As between man and man, it is not polite.' The duke of Ch'i ordered the disturbers off, but Confucius withdrew, carrying the duke of Lû with him. The business proceeded, notwithstanding, and when the words of the alliance were being read on the part of Ch't,- So be it to Lû, if it contribute not 300 chariots of war to the help of Ch'i, when its army goes across its borders, a messenger from Confucius added,-: And so be it to us, if we obey your orders, unless you return to us the fields on the south of the Wan.' At the conclusion of the ceremonies, the prince of Ch'i wanted to give a grand entertainment, but Confucius demonstrated that such a thing would be contrary to the established rules of propriety, his real object being to keep his sovereign out of danger. In this way the two parties separated, they of Ch'i filled with shame at being foiled and disgraced by 'the man of ceremonies;' and the result was that the lands of Lû which had been appropriated by Ch'i were restored 1.

For two years more Confucius held the office of minister of Crime. Some have supposed that he was further raised to the dignity of chief minister of the State?, but that-was not the case. One instance of the manner in which he executed his functions is worth recording. When any matter came before him, he took the opinion of different individuals upon it, and in giving judgment would say, 'I decide according to the view of so and so.' There was an approach to our jury system in the plan, Confucius's object being to enlist general sympathy, and carry the public judgment with him in his administration of justice. A father having brought some charge against his son, Confucius kept them both in prison for three months, without making any difference in favour of the father, and then wished to dismiss them both. The head of the Chi was dissatisfied, and said, 'You are playing with me, Sir minister of Crime. Formerly you told me that in a State or a family filial duty was the first thing to be insisted on. What hinders you now from putting to death this unfilial son as an example to all the people?' Confucius with a sigh replied, 'When superiors fail in their duty, and yet go to put their inferiors to death, it is not right. has not taught his son to be filial; -- to listen to his charge would be to slay the guiltless. The manners of the agu have been long in a sad condition; we cannot expect the people not to be transgressing the laws "."

At this time two of his disciples, Tsze-lû and Tsze-yû, entered the employment of the Chi family, and lent their influence, the former especially, to forward the plans of their master. One great cause of disorder in the State was the fortified cities held by the three chiefs, in which they could defy the supreme authority, and were in turn defied themselves by their officers. Those cities were like the castles of the barons of England in the time of the Norman kings. Confucius had their destruction very much at heart, and partly by the influence of persuasion, and partly by the assisting counsels of Tsze-lû, he accomplished his object in regard to Pi¹, the chief city of the Chî, and Hâu², the chief city of the Shû.

It does not appear that he succeeded in the same way in dismantling Ch'ang³, the chief city of the Mang⁴; but his authority in the State greatly increased. 'He strengthened the ducal House and weakened the private Families. He exalted the sovereign, and depressed the ministers. A transforming government went abroad. Dishonesty and dissoluteness were ashamed and hid their heads. Loyalty and good faith became the characteristics of the men, and chastity and docility those of the women. Strangers came in crowds from other States⁵.' Confucius became the idol of the people, and flew in songs through their mouths ⁶.

But this sky of bright promise was soon overcast. As the fame of the reformations in Lû went abroad, the neighbouring princes began to be afraid. The duke of Ch'i said, 'With Confucius at the head of its government, Lû will become supreme among the States, and Ch'i which is nearest to it will be the first swallowed up. Let us propitiate it by a surrender of territory.' One of his ministers proposed that they should first try to separate between the sage and his sovereign, and to effect this, they hit upon the following scheme. Eighty beautiful girls, with musical and dancing accomplishments, and a hundred and twenty of the finest horses that could be found, were selected, and sent as a present to duke Ting. They were put up at first outside the city, and Chi Hwan having gone in disguise to see them, forgot the lessons of Confucius, and took the duke to look at the bait. They were both captivated. The women were received, and the sage was neglected. For three days the duke gave no audience to his ministers. 'Master,' said Tsze-lû to Confucius, 'it is time for you to be going.' But Confucius was very unwilling to leave. The spring was coming on, when the sacrifice to Heaven would be offered, and he determined to wait and see whether the

*In connexion with these events, the 'Narratives of the School' and Sze-mā Ch'ien mention the summary punishment inflicted by Confucius on an able but unscrupulous and insidious officer, the Shaou-chang Maou () His judgment and death occupy a conspicuous place in the legendary accounts. But the Analesta, Taxe-sze, Mencius, and Tso Ch'iû-ming are all silent about it, and Chiang Yung rightly rejects it as one of the many narratives invented to exalt the sage.

solemnization of that would bring the duke back to his right mind. No such result followed. The ceremony was hurried through, and portions of the offerings were not sent round to the various ministers, according to the established custom. Confucius regretfully took his departure, going away slowly and by easy stages 1. He would have welcomed a message of recall. But the duke continued in his abandonment, and the sage went forth to thirteen weary years of homeless wandering.

8. On leaving Lû, Confucius first bent his steps westward to the State of Wei, situate about where the present provinces of Chih-li He wanders and Ho-nan adjoin. He was now in his fifty-sixth year, and felt depressed and melancholy. As he went along, he gave expression to his feelings in verse:—

'Fain would I still look towards Lù,
But this Kwei hill cuts off my view.
With an axe, I'd hew the thickets through:— Vain thought! 'gainst the hill I nought can do;'

and again,-

'Through the valley howls the blast, Drizzling rain falls thick and fast. Homeward goes the youthful bride, O'er the wild, crowds by her side. How is it, O azure Heaven, From my home I thus am driven, Through the land my way to trace, With no certain dwelling-place? Dark, dark, the minds of men! Worth in vain comes to their ken. Hastens on my term of years; Old age, desolate, appears².'

A number of his disciples accompanied him, and his sadness infected them. When they arrived at the borders of Wei, at a place called I, the warden sought an interview, and on coming out from the sage, he tried to comfort the disciples, saying, 'My friends, why are you distressed at your master's loss of office? The world has been long without the principles of truth and right; Heaven is going to use your master as a bell with its wooden tongue.' Such was the thought of this friendly stranger. The bell did indeed sound, but few had ears to bear.

'史記,孔子世家, p. 5. See also Mencius, V. Pt. II. i. 4; et al. Chiang Yung's Life of Confucius, 去想周游者. Ana. III. xxiv.

Confucius's fame, however, had gone before him, and he was in little danger of having to suffer from want. On arriving at the capital of Wei, he lodged at first with a worthy officer, named Yen Ch'auva 1. The reigning duke, known to us by the epithet of Ling 2, was a worthless, dissipated man, but he could not neglect a visitor of such eminence, and soon assigned to Confucius a revenue of 60,000 measures of grain 3. Here he remained for ten months, and then for some reason left it to go to Ch'an 4. On the way he had to pass by K'wang 6, a place probably in the present department of K'al-fung in Ho-nan, which had formerly suffered from Yang-hû. It so happened that Confucius resembled Hû, and the attention of the people being called to him by the movements of his carriage-driver, they thought it was their old enemy, and made an attack upon him. His followers were alarmed, but he was calm, and tried to assure them by declaring his belief that he had a divine mission. them, 'After the death of king Wan, was not the cause of truth lodged here in me? If Heaven had wished to let this cause of truth perish, then I, a future mortal, should not have got such a relation to that cause. While Heaven does not let the cause of truth perish, what can the people of K'wang do to me ??' Having escaped from the hands of his assailants, he does not seem to have carried out his purpose of going to Ch'an, but returned to Wei.

On the way, he passed a house where he had formerly lodged, and finding that the master was dead, and the funeral ceremonies going on, he went in to condole and weep. When he came out, he told Tsze-kung to take the outside horses from his carriage, and give them as a contribution to the expenses of the occasion. 'You never did such a thing,' Tsze-kung remonstrated, 'at the funeral of any of your disciples; is it not too great a gift on this occasion of the death of an old host?' 'When I went in,' replied Confucius, 'my presence brought a burst of grief from the chief mourner, and I joined him with my tears. I dislike the thought of my tears not being followed by anything. Do it, my child?'

On reaching Wei, he lodged with Chu Po-yu, an officer of whom honourable mention is made in the Analects 1. But this time he did not remain long in the State. The duke was B. C. 495. married to a lady of the house of Sung, known by the name of Nan-tsze, notorious for her intrigues and wickedness. sought an interview with the sage, which he was obliged unwillingly to accord 2. No doubt he was innocent of thought or act of evil, but it gave great dissatisfaction to Tsze-lû that his master should have been in company with such a woman, and Confucius, to assure him, swore an oath, saying, 'Wherein I have done improperly, may Heaven reject me! May Heaven reject me 3!' He could not well abide, however, about such a court. One day the duke rode out through the streets of his capital in the same carriage with Nan-tsze, and made Confucius follow them in another. Perhaps he intended to honour the philosopher, but the people saw the incongruity, and cried out, 'Lust in the front; virtue behind!' Confucius was ashamed, and made the observation, 'I have not seen one who loves virtue as he loves beauty 4. Wei was no place for him. and took his way towards Ch'an.

Ch'an, which formed part of the present province of Ho-nan, lay south from Wei. After passing the small State of Ts'ao 5, he approached the borders of Sung, occupying the present prefecture of Kwei-teh, and had some intentions of entering it, when an incident occurred, which it is not easy to understand from the meagre style in which it is related, but which gave occasion to a remarkable saying. Confucius was practising ceremonies with his disciples, we are told, under the shade of a large tree. Hwan Tûi, an ill-minded officer of Sung, heard of it, and sent a band of men to pull down the tree, and kill the philosopher, if they could get hold of him. The disciples were much alarmed, but Confucius observed, 'Heaven has produced the virtue that is in me; -what can Hwan Tûi do to me •?' They all made their escape, but seem to have been driven westwards to the State of Chang, on arriving at the gate conducting into which from the east, Confucius found himself separated from his followers. Tsze-kung had arrived before him, and was told by a native of Chang that there was a man standing by the east gate, with a forehead like Yao, a neck like Kao-yao, his shoulders on a level with those of Tsze-ch'an, but wanting, below the waist, three inches of the height of Yu, and altogether having the disconsolate appearance of a stray dog.' Tsze-kung knew it was the master, hastened to him, and repeated to his great amusement the description which the man had given. 'The bodily appearance.' said Confucius, 'is but a small matter, but to say I was like a stray dog,—capital! capital!!' The stay they made at Chang was short, and by the end of B. C. 495, Confucius was in Chan.

All the next year he remained there, lodging with the warder of the city wall, an officer of worth, of the name of Chang², and we have no accounts of him which deserve to be related here³.

In B. C. 494, Ch'an was much disturbed by attacks from Wû 4, a large State, the capital of which was in the present department of Sû-châu, and Confucius determined to retrace his steps to Wei. On the way he was laid hold of at a place called P'û 5, which was held by a rebellious officer against Wei, and before he could get away, he was obliged to engage that he would not proceed thither. Thither, notwithstanding, he continued his route, and when Tszekung asked him whether it was right to violate the oath he had taken, he replied, 'It was a forced oath. The spirits do not hear such ''. The duke Ling received him with distinction, but paid no more attention to his lessons than before, and Confucius is said then to have uttered his complaint, 'If there were any of the princes who would employ me, in the course of twelve months I should have done something considerable. In three years the government would be perfected '.'

A circumstance occurred to direct his attention to the State of Tsin⁸, which occupied the southern part of the present Shan-hst, and extended over the Yellow river into Ho-nan. An invitation came to Confucius, like that which he had formerly received from Kung-shan Fû-zâo. Pî Hsî, an officer of Tsin, who was holding the town of Chung-mâu against his chief, invited him to visit him, and Confucius was inclined to go. Tsze-lû was always the mentor on such occasions. He said to him, 'Master, I have heard you say, that when a man in his own person is guilty of doing evil, a superior man will not associate with him. Pi Hsi is in rebellion; if you go to him, what shall be said?' Confucius replied, 'Yes, I did use those words. But is it not said that if a thing be really hard, it may be ground without being made thin; and if it be really white, it may be steeped in a dark fluid without being made black? Am I a bitter gourd? Am I to be hung up out of the way of being eaten 1?'

These sentiments sound strangely from his lips. After all, he did not go to Pi Hsi; and having travelled as far as the Yellow river that he might see one of the principal ministers of Tsin, he heard of the violent death of two men of worth, and returned to Wei, lamenting the fate which prevented him from crossing the stream, and trying to solace himself with poetry as he had done on leaving Lû. Again did he communicate with the duke, but as ineffectually, and disgusted at being questioned by him about military tactics, he left and went back to Ch'an.

He resided in Ch'an all the next year, B. C. 491, without anything occurring there which is worthy of note². Events had transpired in Lû, however, which were to issue in his return to his native State. The duke Ting had deceased B. C. 494, and Chi Hwan, the chief of the Chi family, died in this year. On his death-bed, he felt remorse for his conduct to Confucius, and charged his successor, known to us in the Analects as Chi K'ang, to recall the sage; but the charge was not immediately fulfilled. Chi K'ang, by the advice of one of his officers, sent to Ch'an for the disciple Yen Ch'iù instead. Confucius willingly sent him off, and would gladly have accompanied him. 'Let me return!' he said, 'Let me return³!' But that was not to be for several years yet.

In B. C. 490, accompanied, as usual, by several of his disciples, he went from Ch'an to Ts'ai, a small dependency of the great fief of Ch'û, which occupied a large part of the present provinces of Hûnan and Hû-pei. On the way, between Ch'an and Ts'ai, their provisions became exhausted, and they were cut off somehow from obtaining a fresh supply. The disciples were quite overcome with want, and Tsze-lû said to the master, 'Has the superior man indeed to endure in this way?' Confucius answered him, 'The superior man may indeed have to endure want; but the mean man, when he is in want, gives way to unbridled license¹.' According to the 'Narratives of the School,' the distress continued seven days, during which time Confucius retained his equanimity, and was even cheerful, playing on his lute and singing³. He retained, however, a strong impression of the perils of the season, and we find him afterwards recurring to it, and lamenting that of the friends that were with him in Ch'an and Ts'ai, there were none remaining to enter his door³.

Escaped from this strait, he remained in Ts'ài over B. C. 489, and in the following year we find him in Sheh, another district of Ch'û, the chief of which had taken the title of duke, according to the usurping policy of that State. Puzzled about his visitor, he asked Tsze-lû what he should think of him, but the disciple did not venture a reply. When Confucius heard of it, he said to Tsze-lû, 'Why did you not say to him:—He is simply a man who in his eager pursuit of knowledge forgets his food, who in the joy of its attainment forgets his sorrows, and who does not perceive that old age is coming on 4?' Subsequently, the duke, in conversation with Confucius, asked him about government, and got the reply, dictated by some circumstances of which we are ignorant, 'Good government obtains, when those who are near are made happy, and those who are far off are attracted 5.'

After a short stay in Sheh, according to Sze-mâ Ch'ien, he returned to Ts'âi, and having to cross a river, he sent Taze-lû to inquire for the ford of two men who were at work in a neighbouring field. They were recluses,—men who had withdrawn from public life in disgust at the waywardness of the times. One of them was called Ch'ang-tsü, and instead of giving Tase-lû the information he wanted, he asked him, 'Who is it that holds the reins in the carriage there?' 'It is K'ung Ch'iû.' 'K'ung Ch'iû of Lû?' 'Yes,' was the reply, and then the man rejoined, 'He knows the ford.'

Tsze-lû applied to the other, who was called Chieh-ni, but got for answer the question, 'Who are you, Sir?' He replied, 'I am Chung Yû.' 'Chung Yû, who is the disciple of K'ung Ch'iù of Lû?' 'Yes,' again replied Tsze-lû, and Chieh-ni said to him, 'Disorder, like a swelling flood, spreads over the whole kingdom, and who is he that will change it for you? Than follow one who merely withdraws from this one and that one, had you not better follow those who withdraw from the world altogether?' With this he fell to covering up the seed, and gave no more heed to the stranger. Tsze-lû went back and reported what they had said, when Confucius vindicated his own course, saying, 'It is impossible to associate with birds and beasts as if they were the same with us. If I associate not with these people,—with mankind,—with whom shall I associate? If right principles prevailed through the kingdom, there would be no need for me to change its state¹.'

About the same time he had an encounter with another recluse, who was known as 'The madman of Ch'û.' He passed by the carriage of Confucius, singing out, 'O phœnix, O phœnix, how is your virtue degenerated! As to the past, reproof is useless, but the future may be provided against. Give up, give up your vain pursuit.' Confucius alighted and wished to enter into conversation with him, but the man hastened away'.

But now the attention of the ruler of Ch'û-king, as he styled himself-was directed to the illustrious stranger who was in his dominions, and he met Confucius and conducted him to his capital, which was in the present district of 1-ch'ang, in the department of Hsiang-yang³, in Hû-pei. After a time, he proposed endowing the philosopher with a considerable territory, but was dissuaded by his prime minister, who said to him, 'Has your majesty any officer who could discharge the duties of an ambassador like Tsze-kung? or any one so qualified for a premier as Yen Hûi? or any one to compare as a general with Tsze-lû? The kings Wan and Wû, from their hereditary dominions of a hundred it, rose to the sovereignty of the kingdom. If K'ung Ch'iû, with such disciples to be his ministers, get the possession of any territory, it will not be to the prosperity of Ch'a'? On this remonstrance the king gave up his purpose; and, when he died in the same year, Confucius left the State, and went back again to Wei.

The duke Ling had died four years before, soon after Confucius had last parted from him, and the reigning duke, known to us by the title of Ch'û's, was his grandson, and was holding the principality against his own father. The relations the 史記, 孔子世家, p. 10. 出公. "要陽府宜城縣. 'See between them were rather complicated. The father had been driven out in consequence of an attempt which he had instigated on the life of his step-mother, the notorious Nan-tsze, and the succession was given to his son. Subsequently, the father wanted to reclaim what he deemed his right, and an unseemly struggle ensued. The duke Ch'û was conscious how much his cause would be strengthened by the support of Confucius, and hence when he got to Wei, Tsze-lû could say to him, 'The prince of Wei has been waiting for you, in order with you to administer the government;what will you consider the first thing to be done 1?' The opinion of the philosopher, however, was against the propriety of the duke's course 2, and he declined taking office with him, though he remained in Wei for between five and six years. During all that time there is a blank in his history. In the very year of his return, according to the 'Annals of the Empire,' his most beloved disciple, Yen Hûi, died, on which occasion he exclaimed, 'Alas! Heaven is destroying me! Heaven is destroying me's!' The death of his wife is assigned to B.C. 484, but nothing else is related which we can connect with this long period.

9. His return to Lû was brought about by the disciple Yen Yû, who, we have seen, went into the service of Chî K'ang, in B.C. 491.

From his re. In the year B.C. 483, Yû had the conduct of some military operations against Ch'î, and being successful, a.c. 484-478. Chî K'ang asked him how he had obtained his military skill;—was it from nature, or by learning? He replied that he had learned it from Confucius, and entered into a glowing eulogy of the philosopher. The chief declared that he would bring Confucius home again to Lû. 'If you do so,' said the disciple, 'see that you do not let mean men come between you and him.' On this K'ang sent three officers with appropriate presents to Wei, to invite the wanderer home, and he returned with them accordingly'.

This event took place in the eleventh year of the duke Ai', who succeeded to Ting, and according to K'ung Fû, Confucius's descendant, the invitation proceeded from him'. We may suppose that Ana. XIII. iii. In the notes on this passage, I have given Chû, Hel's opinion as to the time when Tsze-lû made this remark. It seems more correct, however, to refer it to Confucius's return to Wei from Ch'û, as is done by Chiang Yung.

while Chi K'ang was the mover and director of the proceeding, it was with the authority and approval of the duke. It is represented in the chronicle of Tso Ch'iû-ming as having occurred at a very opportune time. The philosopher had been consulted a little before by K'ung Wăn 1, an officer of Wei, about how he should conduct a feud with another officer, and disgusted at being referred to on such a subject, had ordered his carriage and prepared to leave the State, exclaiming, 'The bird chooses its tree. The tree does not choose the bird.' K'ung Wăn endeavoured to excuse himself, and to prevail on Confucius to remain in Wei, and just at this juncture the messengers from Lû arrived 2.

Confucius was now in his sixty-ninth year. The world had not dealt kindly with him. In every State which he had visited he had met with disappointment and sorrow. Only five more years remained to him, nor were they of a brighter character than the past. He had, indeed, attained to that state, he tells us, in which 'he could follow what his heart desired without transgressing what was right 3, but other people were not more inclined than they had been to abide by his counsels. The duke Ai and Chi K'ang often conversed with him, but he no longer had weight in the guidance of state affairs, and wisely addressed himself to the completion of his literary labours. He wrote a preface, according to Sze-må Ch'ien, to the Shû-ching; carefully digested the rites and ceremonies determined by the wisdom of the more ancient sages and kings; collected and arranged the ancient poetry; and undertook the reform of music. He has told us himself, 'I returned from Wei to Lû, and then the music was reformed, and the pieces in the Songs of the Kingdom and Praise Songs found all their proper place 5.' To the Yi-ching he devoted much study, and Sze-ma Ch'ien says that the leather thongs by which the tablets of his copy were bound together were thrice worn out. 'If some years were added to my life,' he said, 'I would give fifty to the study of the Yi, and then I might come to be without great faults.' During this time also, we may suppose that he supplied Tsang Shan with the materials of the classic of Filial Piety. The same year that he returned, Chi K'ang sent Yen Yû to ask his opinion about an additional impost which he wished to lay upon the people, but Confucius refused to give any reply, telling the disciple privately his disapproval of the proposed measure. It was carried out, however, in the following year, by the agency of Yen, on which occasion, I suppose, it was that Confucius said to the other disciples, 'He is no disciple of mine; my little children, beat the drum and assail him'.' The year B.C. 483 was marked by the death of his son Lt, which he seems to have borne with more equanimity than he did that of his disciple Yen Hûi, which some writers assign to the following year, though I have already mentioned it under the year B.C. 489.

In the spring of B.C. 481, a servant of Chi K'ang caught a Ch'i-lin on a hunting excursion of the duke in the present district of Chiâ-hsiang². No person could tell what strange animal it was, and Confucius was called to look at it. He at once knew it to be a lin, and the legend-writers say that it bore on one of its horns the piece of ribbon, which his mother had attached to the one that appeared to her before his birth. According to the chronicle of Kung-yang, he was profoundly affected. He cried out, 'For whom have you come?' His tears flowed freely, and he added, 'The course of my doctrines is run².'

Notwithstanding the appearance of the lin, the life of Confucius was still protracted for two years longer, though he took occasion to terminate with that event his history of the Ch'un Ch'iû. This Work, according to Sze-mâ Ch'ien, was altogether the production of this year, but we need not suppose that it was so. In it, from the standpoint of Lû, he briefly indicates the principal events occurring throughout the country, every term being expressive, it is said, of the true character of the actors and events described. Confucius said himself, 'It is the Spring and Autumn which will make men know me, and it is the Spring and Autumn which will make men condemn me '.' Mencius makes the composition of it to have been an achievement as great as Yû's regulation of the waters of the deluge:—'Confucius completed the Spring and Autumn, and rebellious ministers and villainous sons were struck with terror'.'

Towards the end of this year, word came to Lû that the duke of Ch'i had been murdered by one of his officers. Confucius was moved with indignation. Such an outrage, he felt, called for his solemn interference. He bathed, went to court, and represented the matter to the duke, saying, 'Ch'an Hang has slain his sovereign, I beg that you will undertake to punish him.' The duke pleaded his incapacity, urging that Lû was weak compared with Ch'i, but Confucius replied, 'One half the people of Ch'i are not consenting to the deed. If you add to the people of Lû one half the people of Ch'i, you are sure to overcome.' But he could not infuse his spirit into the duke, who told him to go and lay the matter before the chiefs of the three Families. Sorely against his sense of propriety, he did so, but they would not act, and he withdrew with the remark, 'Following in the rear of the great officers, I did not dare not to represent such a matter '.'

In the year B.C. 479, Confucius had to mourn the death of another of his disciples, one of those who had been longest with him,—the well-known Tsze-lû. He stands out a sort of Peter in the Confucian school, a man of impulse, prompt to speak and prompt to act. He gets many a check from the master, but there is evidently a strong sympathy between them. Tsze-lû uses a freedom with him on which none of the other disciples dares to venture, and there is not one among them all, for whom, if I may speak from my own feeling, the foreign student comes to form such a liking. A pleasant picture is presented to us in one passage of the Analects. It is said, 'The disciple Min was standing by his side, looking bland and precise; Tsze-lû (named Yû), looking bold and soldierly; Yen Yû and Tsze-kung, with a free and straightforward manner. The master was pleased, but he observed, "Yû there!—he will not die a natural death?"'

This prediction was verified. When Confucius returned to Lû from Wei, he left Tsze-lû and Tsze-kâo 3 engaged there in official service. Troubles arose. News came to Lû, B.C. 479, that a revolution was in progress in Wei, and when Confucius heard it, he said, 'Ch'âi will come here, but Yû will die 4.' So it turned out. When Tsze-kâo saw that matters were desperate he made his escape, but Tsze-lû would not forsake the chief who had treated him well. He threw himself into the melée, and was slain. Confucius wept sore for him, but his own death was not far off. It took place on the eleventh day of the fourth month in the same year, B.C. 479 1.

Early one morning, we are told, he got up, and with his hands behind his back, dragging his staff, he moved about by his door, crooning over,— 'The great mountain must crumble;

The strong beam must break;
And the wise man wither away like a plant.'

After a little, he entered the house and sat down opposite the door. Tsze-kung had heard his words, and said to himself, 'If the great mountain crumble, to what shall I look up? If the strong beam break, and the wise man wither away, on whom shall I lean? The master, I fear, is going to be ill.' With this he hastened into the house. Confucius said to him, 'Ts'ze, what makes you so late! According to the statutes of Hsia, the corpse was dressed and coffined at the top of the eastern steps, treating the dead as if he were still the host. Under the Yin, the ceremony was performed between the two pillars, as if the dead were both host and guest. The rule of Chau is to perform it at the top of the western steps, treating the dead as if he were a guest. I am a man of Yin, and last night I dreamt that I was sitting with offerings before me between the two pillars. No intelligent monarch arises; there is not one in the kingdom that will make me his master. My time has come to die.' So it was. He went to his couch, and after seven days expired 2.

Such is the account which we have of the last hours of the great philosopher of China. His end was not unimpressive, but it was melancholy. He sank behind a cloud. Disappointed hopes made his soul bitter. The great ones of the kingdom had not received his teachings. No wife nor child was by to do the kindly offices of affection for him. Nor were the expectations of another life present with him as he passed through the dark valley. He uttered no prayer, and he betrayed no apprehensions. Deep-treasured in his own heart may have been the thought that he had endeavoured to serve his generation by the will of God, but he gave no sign. 'The mountain falling came to nought, and the rock was removed out of his place. So death prevailed against him and he passed; his countenance was changed, and he was sent away.'

10. I flatter myself that the preceding paragraphs contain a more correct narrative of the principal incidents in the life of Confucius than has vet been given in any European language. They might easily have been expanded into a volume, but I did not wish to exhaust the subject, but only to furnish a sketch, which, while it might satisfy the general reader, would be of special assistance to the careful student of the classical Books. I had taken many notes of the manifest errors in regard to chronology and other matters in the 'Narratives of the School,' and the chapter of Sze-mâ Ch'ien on the Kung family, when the digest of Chiang Yung, to which I have made frequent reference, attracted my attention. Conclusions to which I had come were confirmed, and a clue was furnished to difficulties which I was seeking to disentangle. I take the opportunity to acknowledge here my obligations to it. With a few notices of Confucius's habits and manners, I shall conclude this section.

Very little can be gathered from reliable sources on the personal appearance of the sage. The height of his father is stated, as I have noted, to have been ten feet, and though Confucius came short of this by four inches, he was often called 'the tall man.' It is allowed that the ancient foot or cubit was shorter than the modern, but it must be reduced more than any scholar I have consulted has yet done, to bring this statement within the range of credibility. The legends assign to his figure 'nine-and-forty remarkable peculiarities', a tenth part of which would have made him more a monster than a man. Dr. Morrison says that the images of him, which he had seen in the northern parts of China, represent him as of a dark, swarthy colour? It is not so with those common in the south. He was, no doubt, in size and complexion much the same as many of his descendants in the present day. Dr. Edkins and myself enjoyed the services of two of those descendants, who acted as 'wheelers' in the wheelbarrows which conveyed us from Ch'tt-Au to a town on the Grand Canal more than 250 miles off. They were strong, capable men, both physically and mentally superior to their companions.

But if his disciples had nothing to chronicle of his personal appearance, they have gone very minutely into an account of many of his habits. The tenth Book of the Analects is all occupied with his deportment, his eating, and his dress. In public, whether in the village, the temple, or the court, he was the man of rule and ceremony, but 'at home he was not formal.' Yet if not formal, he was particular. In bed even he did not forget himself;—'he did not lie like a corpse,' and 'he did not speak.' 'He required his aleeping dress to be half as long again as his body.' 'If he happened to be sick, and the prince came to visit him, he had his face set to the east, made his court robes be put over him, and drew his girdle across them.'

He was nice in his diet,—'not disliking to have his rice dressed fine, nor to have his minced meat cut small.' 'Anything at all gone he would not touch.' 'He must have his meat cut properly, and to every kind its proper sauce; but he was not a great eater.' 'It was only in drink that he laid down no limit to himself, but he did not allow himself to be confused by it.' 'When the villagers were drinking together, on those who carried staffs going out, he went out immediately after.' There must always be ginger at the table, and 'when eating, he did not converse.' 'Although his food might be coarse rice and poor soup, he would offer a little of it in sacrifice, with a grave, respectful air.'

'On occasion of a sudden clap of thunder, or a violent wind, he would change countenance. He would do the same, and rise up moreover, when he found himself a guest at a loaded board.' 'At the sight of a person in mourning, he would also change countenance, and if he happened to be in his carriage, he would bend forward with a respectful salutation.' 'His general way in his carriage was not to turn his head round, nor talk hestily, nor point with his hands.' He was charitable. 'When any of his friends died, if there were no relations who could be depended on for the necessary offices, he would say, "I will bury him."

The disciples were so careful to record these and other characteristics of their master, it is said, because every act, of movement or of rest, was closely associated with the great principles which it was his object to inculcate. The detail of so many small matters, however, hardly impresses a foreigner so favourably. There rather seems to be a want of freedom about the philosopher.

SECTION II.

HIS INFLUENCE AND OPINIONS.

1. Confucius died, we have seen, complaining that of all the princes of the kingdom there was not one who would adopt his Homage ren. principles and obey his lessons. He had hardly passed from the stage of life, when his merit began passed from the stage of life, when his merit began to be acknowledged. When the duke Åi heard of his death, he pronounced his eulogy in the words, 'Heaven has not left to me the aged man. There is none now to assist me on the throne. Woe is me! Alas! O venerable Ni¹!' Tsze-kung complained of the inconsistency of this lamentation from one who could not use the master when he was alive, but the prince was probably sincere in his grief. He caused a temple to be erected, and ordered that sacrifice should be offered to the sage, at the four seasons of the year 2.

The sovereigns of the tottering dynasty of Chau had not the intelligence, nor were they in a position, to do honour to the departed philosopher, but the facts detailed in the first chapter of these prolegomena, in connexion with the attempt of the founder of the Ch'in dynasty to destroy the literary monuments of antiquity, show how the authority of Confucius had come by that time to prevail through the nation. The founder of the Han dynasty, in passing through Lû, B.C. 195, visited his tomb and offered the three victims in sacrifice to him. Other sovereigns since then have often made pilgrimages to the spot. The most famous temple in the empire now rises near the place of the grave. The second and greatest of the rulers of the present dynasty, in the twenty-third year of his reign, the Kang-hat period, there set the example of kneeling thrice, and each time laying his forehead thrice in the dust, before the image of the sage.

In the year of our Lord 1, began the practice of conferring honorary designations on Confucius by imperial authority. The emperor Ping 3 then styled him—'The duke Nt, all-complete and illustrious 1.' This was changed, in A.D. 492, to—'The venerable N1, the accomplished Sage 2.' Other titles have supplanted this. Shun-chih 3, the first of the Man-châu dynasty, adopted, in his second year, A.D. 1645, the style,—'K'ung, the ancient Teacher, accomplished and illustrious, all-complete, the perfect Sage 4;' but twelve years later, a shorter title was introduced,—'K'ung, the ancient Teacher, the perfect Sage 5.' Since that year no further alteration has been made.

At first, the worship of Confucius was confined to the country of Lû, but in A.D. 57 it was enacted that sacrifices should be offered to him in the imperial college, and in all the colleges of the principal territorial divisions throughout the empire. In those sacrifices he was for some centuries associated with the duke of Châu, the legislator to whom Confucius made frequent reference, but in A.D. 609 separate temples were assigned to them, and in 628 our sage displaced the older worthy altogether. About the same time began the custom, which continues to the present day, of erecting temples to him,—separate structures, in connexion with all the colleges, or examination-halls, of the country.

The sage is not alone in those temples. In a hall behind the principal one occupied by himself are the tablets-in some cases the images—of several of his ancestors, and other worthies; while associated with himself are his principal disciples, and many who in subsequent times have signalized themselves as expounders and exemplifiers of his doctrines. On the first day of every month, offerings of fruits and vegetables are set forth, and on the fifteenth there is a solemn burning of incense. But twice a year, in the middle months of spring and autumn, when the first ting day of the month comes round, the worship of Confucius is performed with peculiar solemnity. At the imperial college the emperor himself is required to attend in state, and is in fact the principal performer. After all the preliminary arrangements have been made, and the emperor has twice knelt and six times bowed his head to the earth, the presence of Confucius's spirit is invoked in the words, 'Great art thou, O perfect sage! Thy virtue is full; thy doctrine is complete. Among mortal men there has not been thine equal. All kings honour thee. Thy statutes and laws have come gloriously down. Thou art the pattern in this imperial school. Reverently have the sacrificial vessels been set out. Full of awe, we sound our drums and bells '.'

The spirit is supposed now to be present, and the service proceeds through various offerings, when the first of which has been set forth, an officer reads the following 2, which is the prayer on the occasion:—'On this ... month of this ... year, I. A.B. the emperor, offer a sacrifice to the philosopher Kung, the ancient Teacher, the perfect Sage, and say,—O Teacher, in virtue equal to Heaven and Earth, whose doctrines embrace the past time and the present, thou didst digest and transmit the six classics, and didst hand down lessons for all generations! Now in this second month of spring (or autumn), in reverent observance of the old statutes. with victims, silks, spirits, and fruits, I carefully offer sacrifice to thee. With thee are associated the philosopher Yen, Continuator of thee; the philosopher Tsang, Exhibiter of thy fundamental principles: the philosopher Tsze-sze. Transmitter of thee: and the philosopher Mang, Second to thee. May'st thou enjoy the offerings!

I need not go on to enlarge on the homage which the emperors of China render to Confucius. It could not be more complete. He was unreasonably neglected when alive. He is now unreasonably venerated when dead.

2. The rulers of China are not singular in this matter, but in entire sympathy with the mass of their people. It is the distinction of this empire that education has been highly prized General appreciation of Conin it from the earliest times. It was so before the era of Confucius, and we may be sure that the system met with his approbation. One of his remarkable sayings was,-'To lead an uninstructed people to war is to throw them away .' When he pronounced this judgment, he was not thinking of military training, but of education in the duties of life and citizenship. A people so taught, he thought, would be morally fitted to fight for their government. Mencius, when lecturing to the ruler of Tang on the proper way of governing a kingdom, told him that he must provide the means of education for all, the poor as well as the rich. Establish,' said he, 'hsiang, hsu, hsuo, and hsido,—all those educational institutions,-for the instruction of the people 4.

^{1 *} See the 大清通 禮卷十二. * Ana. XIII. xxx. * Meneius III. Pt. L iii. zo.

At the present day, education is widely diffused throughout China. In few other countries is the schoolmaster more abroad, and in all schools it is Confucius who is taught. The plan of competitive examinations, and the selection for civil offices only from those who have been successful candidates,—good so far as the competition is concerned, but injurious from the restricted range of subjects with which an acquaintance is required,—have obtained for more than twelve centuries. The classical works are the text books. It is from them almost exclusively that the themes proposed to determine the knowledge and ability of the students are chosen. The whole of the magistracy of China is thus versed in all that is recorded of the sage, and in the ancient literature which he preserved. His thoughts are familiar to every man in authority, and his character is more or less reproduced in him.

The official civilians of China, numerous as they are, are but a fraction of its students, and the students, or those who make literature a profession, are again but a fraction of those who attend school for a shorter or longer period. Yet so far as the studies have gone, they have been occupied with the Confucian writings. In the schoolrooms there is a tablet or inscription on the wall, sacred to the sage, and every pupil is required, on coming to school on the morning of the first and fifteenth of every month, to bow before it, the first thing, as an act of reverence 1. Thus all in China who receive the slightest tincture of learning do so at the fountain of Confucius. They learn of him and do homage to him at once. I have repeatedly quoted the statement that during his life-time he had three thousand disciples. Hundreds of millions are his disciples now. It is hardly necessary to make any allowance in this statement for the followers of Taoism and Buddhism, for, as Sir John Davis has observed, 'whatever the other opinions or faith of a Chinese may be, he takes good care to treat Confucius with respect 2.' For two thousand years he has reigned supreme, the undisputed teacher of this most populous land.

3. This position and influence of Confucius are to be ascribed, I conceive, chiefly to two causes:—his being the preserver, namely of the monuments of antiquity, and the exemplifier and expounder of the maxims of the golden age of China; and the devotion to him of his immediate disciples and their early followers. The national and the personal are thus blended in him, each in its highest degree of excellence. He was a Chinese of the Chinese; he is also represented as, and all now believe him to have been, the beau ideal of humanity in its best and noblest estate.

¹ During the present dynasty, the tablet of 文昌帝君, the god of literature, has to a considerable extent displaced that of Confucius in schools. Yet the worship of him does not clash with that of the other. He is 'the father' of composition only.

² The Chinese, vol. ii. p. 45

4. It may be well to bring forward here Confucius's own estimate of himself and of his doctrines. It will serve to illustrate the statements just made. The following are some of mate of himself and of his dochis sayings:—'The sage and the man of perfect virtue;—how dare I rank myself with them? It may simply be said of me, that I strive to become such-without satiety, and teach others without weariness.' 'In letters I am perhaps equal to other men; but the character of the superior man, carrying out in his conduct what he professes, is what I have not yet attained to.' 'The leaving virtue without proper cultivation; the not thoroughly discussing what is learned; not being able to move towards righteousness of which a knowledge is gained; and not being able to change what is not good; -these are the things which occasion me solicitude.' 'I am not one who was born in the possession of knowledge; I am one who is fond of antiquity and earnest in seeking it there.' 'A transmitter and not a maker, believing in and loving the ancients, I venture to compare myself with our old Pang 1."

Confucius cannot be thought to speak of himself in these declarations more highly than he ought to do. Rather we may recognise in them the expressions of a genuine humility. He was conscious that personally he came short in many things, but he toiled after the character, which he saw, or fancied that he saw, in the ancient sages whom he acknowledged; and the lessons of government and morals which he laboured to diffuse were those which had already been inculcated and exhibited by them. Emphatically he was 'a transmitter and not a maker.' It is not to be understood that he was not fully satisfied of the truth of the principles which he had learned. He held them with the full approval and consent of his own understanding. He believed that if they were acted on, they would remedy the evils of his time.

There was nothing to prevent rulers like Y40 and Shun and the great Yü from again arising and a condition of happy tranquillity being realised throughout the kingdom under their sway.

If in anything he thought himself 'superior and alone,' having attributes which others could not claim, it was in his possessing a divine commission as the conservator of ancient truth and rules. He does not speak very definitely on this point. It is noted that the appointments of Heaven was one of the subjects on which he rarely touched 1.' His most remarkable utterance was that which I have already given in the sketch of his Life:- 'When he was put in fear in K'wang, he said, "After the death of king Wan, was not the cause of truth lodged here in me? If Heaven had wished to let this cause of truth perish, then I, a future mortal, should not have got such a relation to that cause. While Heaven does not let the cause of truth perish, what can the people of Kwang do to me 2?"' Confucius, then, did feel that he was in the world for a special purpose. But it was not to announce any new truths, or to initiate any new economy. It was to prevent what had previously been known from being lost. He followed in the wake of Yao and Shun, of Tang, and king Wan. Distant from the last by a long interval of time, he would have said that he was distant from him also by a great inferiority of character, but still he had learned the principles on which they all happily governed the country, and in their name he would lift up a standard against the prevailing lawlessness of his age.

5. The language employed with reference to Confucius by his disciples and their early followers presents a striking contrast with his own. I have already, in writing of the scope and him by his disciples and their early followers. The Doctrine of the Mean, called attention to the extravagant eulogies of his grandson Tame-sme. He only followed the example which had been set by those among whom the philosopher went in and out. We have the language of Yen Yuan, his favourite, which is comparatively moderate, and simply expresses the genuine admiration of a devoted pupil. Tame-kung on several occasions spoke in a different style. Having heard that one of the chiefs of Lû had said that he himself—Tame-kung—was superior to Confucius, he observed, 'Let me use the comparison of a house and its encompassing wall. My wall only reaches to the shoulders. One may peep over it, and see whatever is valuable in the apartments. The wall of my master is several fathoms high. If one do not find the door and enter by it, he cannot see the rich ancestral temple with its beauties, nor all the officers in their rich array. But I may assume that they are few who find the door. The remark of the chief was only what might have been expected 1.'

Another time, the same individual having spoken revilingly of Confucius, Taze-kung said, 'It is of no use doing so. Chung-nt cannot be reviled. The talents and virtue of other men are hillocks and mounds which may be stepped over. Chung-nt is the sun or moon, which it is not possible to step over. Although a man may wish to cut himself off from the sage, what harm can he do to the sun and moon? He only shows that he does not know his own capacity².'

In conversation with a fellow-disciple, Tsze-kung took a still higher flight. Being charged by Tsze-ch'in with being too modest, for that Confucius was not really superior to him, he replied, 'For one word a man is often deemed to be wise, and for one word he is often deemed to be foolish. We ought to be careful indeed in what we say. Our master cannot be attained to, just in the same way as the heavens cannot be gone up to by the steps of a stair. Were our master in the position of the prince of a State, or the chief of a Family, we should find verified the description which has been given of a sage's rule:—He would plant the people, and forthwith they would be established; he would lead them on, and forthwith they would follow him; he would make them happy, and forthwith multitudes would resort to his dominions; he would stimulate them, and forthwith they would be harmonious. While he lived, he would be glorious. When he died, he would be bitterly lamented. How is it possible for him to be attained to 3?'

From these representations of Tsze-kung, it was not a difficult step for Tsze-sze to take in exalting Confucius not only to the level of the ancient sages, but as 'the equal of Heaven.' And Mencius took up the theme. Being questioned by Kung-sun Ch'an, one of his disciples, about two acknowledged sages, Po-1 and I Yin, whether they were to be placed in the same rank with Confucius, he replied, 'No. Since there were living men until now, there never was another Confucius;' and then he proceeded to fortify his oninion by the concurring testimony of Tsti Wo, Tsze-kung, and Ya Zo, who all had wisdom, he thought sufficient to know their master. Tsåi Wo's opinion was, 'According to my view of our master, he is far superior to Yao and Shun.' Tsze-kung said, 'By viewing the ceremonial ordinances of a prince, we know the character of his government. By hearing his music, we know the character of his virtue. From the distance of a hundred ages after. I can arrange, according to their merits, the kings of those hundred ages:-not one of them can escape me. From the birth of mankind till now, there has never been another like our master.' Yt Zo said, 'Is it only among men that it is so? There is the ch't-lin among quadrupeds; the fung-hwang among birds; the T'ai mountain among mounds and ant-hills; and rivers and seas among rainpools. Though different in degree, they are the same in kind. So the sages among mankind are also the same in kind. But they stand out from their fellows, and rise above the level; and from the birth of mankind till now, there never has been one so complete as Confucius.' I will not indulge in farther illustration. The judgment of the sage's disciples. of Tsze-sze, and of Mencius, has been unchallenged by the mass of the scholars of China. Doubtless it pleases them to bow down at the shrine of the Sage, for their profession of literature is thereby glorified. A reflection of the honour done to him falls upon themselves. And the powers that be, and the multitudes of the people, fall in with the judgment. Confucius is thus, in the empire of China, the one man by whom all possible personal excellence was exemplified, and by whom all possible lessons of social virtue and political wisdom are taught.

6. The reader will be prepared by the preceding account not to expect to find any light thrown by Confucius on the great problems of the human condition and destiny. He did not speculate on the creation of things or the end of them. He was not troubled to account for the origin ritual, and open to the charge of man, nor did he seek to know about his hereafter. He meddled neither with physics nor metaphysics.

The testimony of the Analects about the subjects of his teaching is the following:- His frequent themes of discourse were the Book

¹ Mencius, II. Pt. I. ii. 23-28. 2 'The contents of the YI-ching, and Confucius's labours upon it, may be objected in opposition to this statement, and I must be understood to make it with some reservation. Six years ago, I spent all my leisure time for twelve months in the study of that Work, and wrote out a translation of it, but at the close I was only groping my way in darkness to lay hold of of Poetry, the Book of History, and the maintenance of the rules of Propriety.' 'He taught letters, ethics, devotion of soul, and truthfulness.' 'Extraordinary things; feats of strength; states of disorder; and spiritual beings, he did not like to talk about.'

Confucius is not to be blamed for his silence on the subjects here indicated. His ignorance of them was to a great extent his misfortune. He had not learned them. No report of them had come to him by the ear; no vision of them by the eye. And to his practical mind the toiling of thought amid uncertainties seemed worse than useless.

The question has, indeed, been raised, whether he did not make changes in the ancient creed of China², but I cannot believe that he did so consciously and designedly. Had his idiosyncrasy been different, we might have had expositions of the ancient views on some points, the effect of which would have been more beneficial than the indefiniteness in which they are now left, and it may be doubted so far, whether Confucius was not unfaithful to his guides. But that he suppressed or added, in order to bring in articles of belief originating with himself, is a thing not to be charged against him.

I will mention two important subjects in regard to which there is a conviction in my mind that he came short of the faith of the older sages. The first is the doctrine of God. This name is common in the Shih-ching and Shû-ching. It or Shang-It appears there as a personal being, ruling in heaven and on earth, the author of man's moral nature, the governor among the nations, by whom kings reign and princes decree justice, the rewarder of the good, and the punisher of the bad. Confucius preferred to speak of Heaven. Instances have already been given of this. Two others may be cited:—'He who offends against Heaven has none to whom he can prays?' 'Alas!' said he, 'there is no one that knows me.' Tsze-kung said, 'What do you mean by thus saying that no one knows you?' He replied, 'I do not murmur against Heaven. I do its scope and meaning, and up to this time I have not been able to master it so as to speak positively about it. It will come in due time, in its place, in the present Publication, and I do not think that what I here say of Confucius will require much, if any, modification. So I wrote in 1861; and I at last accomplished a translation of the YI, which was published in 1862, as the sixteenth volume of 'The Sacred Books of the East.' I should like to bring out a revision of that version, with the Chinese text, so as to make it uniform with the volumes of the Classics previously published. But as Yang Ho said to Confucius, 'The years do not wait for ma.'

not grumble against men. My studies lie low, and my penetration rises high. But there is Heaven;—That knows me¹!' Not once throughout the Analects does he use the personal name. I would say that he was unreligious rather than irreligious; yet by the coldness of his temperament and intellect in this matter, his influence is unfavourable to the development of ardent religious feeling among the Chinese people generally; and he prepared the way for the speculations of the literati of mediæval and modern times, which have exposed them to the charge of atheism.

Secondly, Along with the worship of God there existed in China, from the earliest historical times, the worship of other spiritual beings,—especially, and to every individual, the worship of departed ancestors. Confucius recognised this as an institution to be devoutly 'He sacrificed to the dead as if they were present; he sacrificed to the spirits as if the spirits were present. He said, "I consider my not being present at the sacrifice as if I did not sacrifice2."' The custom must have originated from a belief in the continued existence of the dead. We cannot suppose that they who instituted it thought that with the cessation of this life on earth there was a cessation also of all conscious being. But Confucius never spoke explicitly on this subject. He tried to evade it. Lû asked about serving the spirits of the dead, and the master said, "While you are not able to serve men, how can you serve their spirits?" The disciple added, "I venture to ask about death," and he was answered, "While you do not know life, how can you know about death3."' Still more striking is a conversation with another disciple, recorded in the 'Narratives of the School.' Tsze-kung asked him, saying, 'Do the dead have knowledge (of our services, that is), or are they without knowledge?' The master replied, 'If I were to say that the dead have such knowledge, I am afraid that filial sons and dutiful grandsons would injure their substance in paying the last offices to the departed; and if I were to say that the dead have not such knowledge, I am afraid lest unfilial sons should leave their parents unburied. You need not wish, Ts'ze, to know whether the dead have knowledge or not. There is no present urgency about the point. Hereafter you will know it for yourself4.' Surely this was not the teaching proper to a sage.

He said on one occasion that he had no concealments from his disciples1. Why did he not candidly tell his real thoughts on so interesting a subject? I incline to think that he doubted more than he believed. If the case were not so, it would be difficult to account for the answer which he returned to a question as to what constituted wisdom: - 'To give one's self earnestly,' said he, 'to the duties due to men, and, while respecting spiritual beings, to keep aloof from them, may be called wisdom 2. At any rate, as by his frequent references to Heaven, instead of following the phraseology of the older sages, he gave occasion to many of his professed followers to identify God with a principle of reason and the course of nature; so, in the point now in hand, he has led them to deny, like the Sadducees of old, the existence of any spirit at all, and to tell us that their sacrifices to the dead are but an outward form, the mode of expression which the principle of filial piety requires them to adopt when its objects have departed this life.

It will not be supposed that I wish to advocate or to defend the practice of sacrificing to the dead. My object has been to point out how Confucius recognised it, without acknowledging the faith from which it must have originated, and how he enforced it as a matter of form or ceremony. It thus connects itself with the most serious charge that can be brought against him.—the charge of insincerity. Among the four things which it is said he taught, 'truthfulness' specified, and many sayings might be quoted from him, in which 'sincerity' is celebrated as highly and demanded as stringently as ever it has been by any Christian moralist; yet he was not altogether the truthful and true man to whom we accord our highest approbation. There was the case of Mang Chih-fan, who boldly brought up the rear of the defeated troops of Lû, and attributed his occupying the place of honour to the backwardness of his horse. The action was gallant, but the apology for it was weak and unnecessary. And yet Confucius saw nothing in the whole but matter for praise. He could excuse himself from seeing an unwelcome visitor on the ground that he was sick, when there was nothing the matter with hims. These were small matters, but what shall we say to the incident which I have given in the sketch of his Life, p. 79,—his deliberately breaking the oath which he had sworn, simply on the ground that it had been forced from him?

I should be glad if I could find evidence on which to deny the truth of that occurrence. But it rests on the same authority as most other statements about him, and it is accepted as a fact by the people and scholars of China. It must have had, and it must still have, a very injurious influence upon them. Foreigners charge a habit of deceitfulness upon the nation and its government;—on the justice or injustice of this charge I say nothing. For every word of falsehood and every act of insincerity, the guilty party must bear his own burden, but we cannot but regret the example of Confucius in this particular. It is with the Chinese and their sage, as it was with the Jews of old and their teachers. He that leads them has caused them to err, and destroyed the way of their paths.

But was not insincerity a natural result of the un-religion of Confucius? There are certain virtues which demand a true piety in order to their flourishing in the heart of man. Natural affection, the feeling of loyalty, and enlightened policy, may do much to build up and preserve a family and a state, but it requires more to maintain the love of truth, and make a lie, spoken or acted, to be shrunk from with shame. It requires in fact the living recognition of a God of truth, and all the sanctions of revealed religion. Unfortunately the Chinese have not had these, and the example of him to whom they bow down as the best and wisest of men, does not set them against dissimulation.

7. I go on to a brief discussion of Confucius's views on government, or what we may call his principles of political science. It has views on could not be in his long intercourse with his disciples but that he should enunciate many maximas bearing on character and morals generally, but he never rested in the improvement of the individual. 'The kingdom, the world, brought to a state of happy tranquility?,' was the grand object which he delighted to think of; that it might be brought about as easily as 'one can look upon the palm of his hand,' was the dream which it pleased him to indulge? He held that there was in men an adaptation and readiness to be governed, which only needed to be taken advantage of in the proper way. There must be the right administrators, but given those, and 'the growth of government would be rapid, just as vegetation is rapid in the earth; yea, their government would display itself like an easily-growing rush1.' The same sentiment was common from the lips of Mencius. Enforcing it one day, when conversing with one of the petty rulers of his time, he said in his peculiar style, 'Does your Majesty understand the way of the growing grain? During the seventh and eighth months, when drought prevails, the plants become dry. Then the clouds collect densely in the heavens; they send down torrents of rain, and the grain erects itself as if by a shoot. When it does so, who can keep it back2?' Such, he contended, would be the response of the mass of the people to any true 'shepherd of men.' It may be deemed unnecessary that I should specify this point, for it is a truth applicable to the people of all nations. generally, government is by no device or cunning craftiness; human nature demands it. But in no other family of mankind is the characteristic so largely developed as in the Chinese. The love of order and quiet, and a willingness to submit to 'the powers that be,' eminently distinguish them. Foreign writers have often taken notice of this, and have attributed it to the influence of Confucius's doctrines as inculcating subordination; but it existed previous to . his time. The character of the people moulded his system, more than it was moulded by it.

[·]天下平. Sen the 大學, 犯 parts 4, 5; da.

^{&#}x27; Ioniah iii. 12. ' Ana. III. xi ; et ei.

This readiness to be governed arose, according to Confucius, from 'the duties of universal obligation, or those between sovereign and minister, between father and son, between husband and wife, between elder brother and younger, and those belonging to the intercourse of friends3.' Men as they are born into the world, and grow up in it, find themselves existing in those relations. They are the appointment of Heaven. And each relation has its reciprocal obligations, the recognition of which is proper to the Heaven-conferred nature. It only needs that the sacredness of the relations be maintained, and the duties belonging to them faithfully discharged, and the 'happy tranquillity' will prevail all under heaven. As to the institutions of government, the laws and arrangements by which, as through a thousand channels, it should go forth to carry plenty and prosperity through the length and breadth of the country, it did not belong to Confucius, 'the throneless king,' to set them forth minutely. And indeed they were existing in the records of 'the ancient sovereigns.' Nothing new was needed. It was only requisite to pursue the old paths, and raise up the old standards. 'The government of Wan and Wû,' he said, 'is displayed in the records,—the tablets of wood and bamboo. Let there be the men, and the government will flourish; but without the men, the government decays and ceases.' To the same effect was the reply which he gave to Yen Hûi when asked by him how the government of a State should be administered. It seems very wide of the mark, until we read it in the light of the sage's veneration for ancient ordinances, and his opinion of their sufficiency. 'Follow,' he said, 'the seasons of Hsiâ. Ride in the state-carriages of Yin. Wear the ceremonial cap of Châu. Let the music be the Shâo with its pantomimes. Banish the songs of Châng, and keep far from specious talkers?'

Confucius's idea then of a happy, well-governed State did not go beyond the flourishing of the five relations of society which have been mentioned; and we have not any condensed exhibition from him of their nature, or of the duties belonging to the several parties. in them. Of the two first he spoke frequently, but all that he has said on the others would go into small compass. Mencius has said that 'between father and son there should be affection; between sovereign and minister righteousness; between husband and wife attention to their separate functions; between old and young, a proper order; and between friends, fidelity. Confucius, I apprehend, would hardly have accepted this account. It does not bring out sufficiently the authority which he claimed for the father and the sovereign, and the obedience which he exacted from the child and the minister. With regard to the relation of husband and wife, he was in no respect superior to the preceding sages who had enunciated their views of 'propriety' on the subject. We have a somewhat detailed exposition of his opinions in the 'Narratives of the School.'-- 'Man,' said he, 'is the representative of Heaven, and is supreme over all things. Woman yields obedience to the instructions of man, and helps to carry out his principles. On this account she can determine nothing of herself, and is subject to the rule of the three obediences. When young, she must obey her father and elder brother; when married, she must obey her husband; when her husband is dead, she must obey her son. She may not think of marrying a second time. No instructions or orders must issue from the harem. Woman's business is simply the preparation and supplying of drink and food. Beyond the threshold of her apartments she should not be known for evil or for good. She may not cross the boundaries of the State to attend a funeral. may take no step on her own motion, and may come to no conclusion on her own deliberation. There are five women who are not to be taken in marriage:—the daughter of a rebellious house; the daughter of a disorderly house; the daughter of a house which has produced criminals for more than one generation; the daughter of a leprous house; and the daughter who has lost her father and elder brother. A wife may be divorced for seven reasons, which, however, may be overruled by three considerations. The grounds for divorce are disobedience to her husband's parents; not giving birth to a son; dissolute conduct; jealousy—(of her husband's attentions, that is, to the other inmates of his harem); talkativeness; and thieving. The three considerations which may overrule these grounds are-first, if, while she was taken from a home, she has now no home to return to; second, if she have passed with her husband through the three years' mourning for his parents; third, if the husband have become rich from being poor. All these regulations were adopted by the sages in harmony with the natures of man and woman, and to give importance to the ordinance of marriage1.

With these ideas of the relations of society, Confucius dwelt much on the necessity of personal correctness of character on the part of those in authority, in order to secure the right fulfilment of the duties implied in them. This is one grand peculiarity of his teaching. I have adverted to it in the review of 'The Great Learning,' but it deserves some further exhibition, and there are three conversations with the chief Chi K'ang in which it is very expressly set forth. 'Chi K'ang asked about government, and Confucius replied, "To govern means to rectify. If you lead on the people with correctness, who will dare not to be correct?"' 'Chi K'ang, distressed about the number of thieves in the State, inquired of Confucius about how to do away with them. Confucius said, "If you, sir, were not covetous, though you should reward them to do it, they would not steal."' 'Chi K'ang asked about government, saying, "What do you say to killing the unprincipled for the good of the principled?" Confucius replied, "Sir, in carrying on your government, why should you use killing at all? Let your evinced desires be for what is good, and the people will be good. The relation between superiors and inferiors is like that between the wind and the grass. The grass must bend, when the wind blows across it¹."

Example is not so powerful as Confucius in these and many other passages represented it, but its influence is very great. Its virtue is recognised in the family, and it is demanded in the church of Christ. 'A bishop'—and I quote the term with the simple meaning of overseer-'must be blameless.' It seems to me, however, that in the progress of society in the West we have come to think less of the power of example in many departments of state than we ought to do. It is thought of too little in the army and the navy. We laugh at the 'self-denying ordinance,' and the 'new model' of 1644, but there lay beneath them the principle which Confucius so broadly propounded,—the importance of personal virtue in all who are in authority. Now that Great Britain is the governing power over the masses of India, and that we are coming more and more into contact with tens of thousands of the Chinese, this maxim of our sage is deserving of serious consideration from all who bear rule, and especially from those on whom devolves the conduct of affairs. His words on the susceptibility of the people to be acted on by those above them ought not to prove as water spilt on the ground.

But to return to Confucius.—As he thus lays it down that the mainspring of the well-being of society is the personal character of the ruler, we look anxiously for what directions he has given for the cultivation of that. But here he is very defective. 'Self-adjustment and purification,' he said, 'with careful regulation of his dress, and the not making a movement contrary to the rules of propriety;—this is the way for the ruler to cultivate his person.' This is laying too much stress on what is external; but even to attain to this is beyond unassisted human strength. Confucius, however, never recognised a disturbance of the moral elements in the constitution of man. The people would move, according to him, to the virtue of their ruler as the grass bends to the wind, and that virtue would come to the ruler at his call. Many were the lamentations which he uttered over the degeneracy of his times; frequent were the confessions which he made of his own shortcomings. It seems strange that it never came distinctly before him, that there is a power of evil in the prince and the peasant, which no efforts of their own and no instructions of sages are effectual to subdue.

The government which Confucius taught was a despotism, but of a modified character. He allowed no 'ius divinum' independent of personal virtue and a benevolent rule. He has not explicitly stated. indeed, wherein lies the ground of the great relation of the governor and the governed, but his views on the subject were, we may assume. in accordance with the language of the Shû-ching: -- 'Heaven and Earth are the parents of all things and of all things men are the most intelligent. The man among them most distinguished for intelligence becomes chief ruler, and ought to prove himself the parent of the people¹. And again, 'Heaven, protecting the inferior people, has constituted for them rulers and teachers, who should be able to be assisting to God, extending favour and producing tranquillity throughout all parts of the kingdom 2.' The moment the ruler ceases to be a minister of God for good, and does not administer a government that is beneficial to the people, he forfeits the title by which he holds the throne, and perseverance in oppression will surely lead to his overthrow. Mencius inculcated this principle with a frequency and boldness which are remarkable. It was one of the things about which Confucius did not like to talk. Still he held it. It is conspicuous in the last chapter of 'The Great Learning.' Its tendency has been to check the violence of oppression, and maintain the self-respect of the people, all along the course of Chinese history.

I must bring these observations on Confucius's views of government to a close, and I do so with two remarks. First, they are adapted to a primitive, unsophisticated state of society. He is a good counsellor for the father of a family, the chief of a clan, and even the head of a small principality. But his views want the comprehension which would make them of much service in a great dominion. Within three centuries after his death, the government of China passed into a new phase. The founder of the Chin dynasty conceived the grand idea of abolishing all its feudal kingdoms, and centralizing their administration in himself. He effected the revolution, and succeeding dynasties adopted his system, and gradually moulded it into the forms and proportions which are now existing. There has been a tendency to advance, and Confucius has all along been trying to carry the nation back. Principles have been needed, and not 'proprieties.' The consequence is that China has increased beyond its ancient dimensions, while there has been no corresponding development of thought. Its body politic has the size of a giant, while it still retains the mind of a child. Its hoary age is in danger of becoming but senility.

Second, Confucius makes no provision for the intercourse of his country with other and independent nations. He knew indeed of none such. China was to him 'The Middle Kingdom',' 'The multitude of Great States2, 'All under heaven2.' Beyond it were only rude and barbarous tribes. He does not speak of them bitterly, as many Chinese have done since his time. In one place he contrasts their condition favourably with the prevailing anarchy of the kingdom, saying 'The rude tribes of the east and north have their princes, and are not like the States of our great land which are without them4.' Another time, disgusted with the want of appreciation which he experienced, he was expressing his intention to go and live among the nine wild tribes of the east. Some one said, 'They are rude. How can you do such a thing?' His reply was, 'If a superior man dwelt among them, what rudeness would there be ?' But had he been a ruler-sage, he would not only have influenced them by his instructions, but brought them to acknowledge and submit to his sway, as the great Yu did. The only passage of Confucius's teachings from which any rule can be gathered for dealing with foreigners, is that in the 'Doctrine of the Mean,' where 'indulgent treatment of men from a distance' is laid down as one of the nine standard rules for the government of the country'. But 'the men from a distance' are understood to be pin and his simply,-- 'guests,' that is, or officers of one State seeking employment in another, or at the royal court; and 'visitors,' or travelling merchants. Of independent nations the ancient classics have not any knowledge, nor has Confucius. So long as merchants from Europe and other parts of the world could have been content to appear in China as suppliants, seeking the privilege of trade, so long the government would have ranked them with the barbarous hordes of antiquity, and given them the benefit of the maxim about 'indulgent treatment,' according to its own understanding of it. But when their governments interfered, and claimed to treat with that of China on terms of equality, and that their subjects should be spoken to and of as being of the same clay with the Chinese themselves, an outrage was committed on tradition and prejudice, which it was necessary to resent with vehemence.

I do not charge the contemptuous arrogance of the Chinese government and people upon Confucius; what I deplore, is that he left no principles on record to check the development of such a spirit. His simple views of society and government were in a measure sufficient for the people while they dwelt apart from the rest of mankind. His practical lessons were better than if they had been left, which but for him they probably would have been, to fall a prey to the influences of Thoism and Buddhism, but they could only subsist while they were left alone. Of the earth earthy, China was sure to go to pieces when it came into collision with a Christianly-civilized power. Its sage had left it no preservative or restorative elements against such a case.

It is a rude awakening from its complacency of centuries which China has now received. Its ancient landmarks are swept away. Opinions will differ as to the justice or injustice of the grounds on which it has been assailed, and I do not feel called to judge or to pronounce here concerning them. In the progress of events, it could hardly be but that the collision should come; and when it did come it could not be but that China should be broken and scattered. Disorganization will go on to destroy it more and more, and yet there is hope for the people, with their veneration for the relations of society, with their devotion to learning, and with their habits of industry and sobriety;—there is hope for them, if they will look away from all their ancient sages, and turn to Him, who sends them, along with the dissolution of their ancient state, the knowledge of Himself, the only living and true God, and of Jesus Christ whom He hath sent.

8. I have little more to add on the opinions of Confucius. Many of his sayings are pithy, and display much knowledge of character; but as they are contained in the body of the Work, I will not occupy the space here with a selection of those which have struck myself as most worthy of notice. The fourth Book of the Analects.

which is on the subject of zan, or perfect virtue, has several utterances which are remarkable.

Thornton observes:—'It may excite surprise, and probably incredulity, to state that the golden rule of our Saviour, 'Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you, which Mr. Locke designates as 'the most unshaken rule of morality, and foundation of all social virtue,' had been inculcated by Confucius, almost in the same words, four centuries before.' I have taken notice of this fact in reviewing both 'The Great Learning' and 'The Doctrine of the Mean.' I would be far from grudging a tribute of admiration to Confucius for it. The maxim occurs also twice in the Analecta. In Book XV. xxiii, Tsze-kung asks if there be one word which may serve as a rule of practice for all one's life, and is answered, 'Is not reciprocity such a word? What you do not want done to yourself do not do to others.' The same disciple appears in Book V. xi, telling Confucius that he was practising the lesson. He says, 'What I do not wish men to do to me, I also wish not to do to men; but the master tells him, 'Ts'ze, you have not attained to that.' would appear from this reply, that he was aware of the difficulty of obeying the precept; and it is not found, in its condensed expression at least, in the older classics. The merit of it is Confucius's own.

When a comparison, however, is drawn between it and the rule laid down by Christ, it is proper to call attention to the positive form of the latter,—'All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them.' The lesson of the gospel commands men to do what they feel to be right and good. It requires them to commence a course of such conduct, without regard to the conduct of others to themselves. The lesson of Confucius only forbids men to do what they feel to be wrong and hurtful. So far as the point of priority is concerned, moreover, Christ adds, 'This is the law and the prophets.' The maxim was to be found substantially in the earlier revelations of God. Still it must be allowed that Confucius was well aware of the importance of taking the initiative in discharging all the relations of society. See his words as quoted from 'The Doctrine of the Mean' on pages 48, 49 above.

But the worth of the two maxims depends on the intention of the enunciators in regard to their application. Confucius, it seems to me, did not think of the reciprocity coming into action beyond the circle of his five relations of society. Possibly, he might have required its observance in dealings even with the rude tribes, which were the only specimens of mankind besides his own countrymen of which he knew anything, for on one occasion, when asked about perfect virtue, he replied, 'It is, in retirement, to be sedately grave; in the management of business, to be reverently attentive; in intercourse with others, to be strictly sincere. Though a man go among the rude uncultivated tribes, these qualities may not be neglected.' Still, Confucius delivered his rule to his countrymen only, and only for their guidance in their relations of which I have had so much occasion to speak. The rule of Christ is for man as man, having to do with other men, all with himself on the same platform, as the children and subjects of the one God and Father in heaven.

How far short Confucius came of the standard of Christian benevolence, may be seen from his remarks when asked what was to be thought of the principle that injury should be recompensed with kindness. He replied, 'With what then will you recompense kindness? Recompense injury with justice, and recompense kindness with kindness? The same deliverance is given in one of the Books of the Li Chi, where he adds that 'he who recompenses injury with kindness is a man who is careful of his person? Chang Hsuan, the commentator of the second century, says that such a course would be 'incorrect in point of propriety'. This 'propriety' was a great stumbling-block in the way of Confucius. His morality was the result of the balancings of his intellect, fettered by the decisions of men of old, and not the gushings of a loving heart, responsive to the promptings of Heaven, and in sympathy with erring and feeble humanity.

This subject leads me on to the last of the opinions of Confucius which I shall make the subject of remark in this place. A commentator observes, with reference to the inquiry about recompensing injury with kindness, that the questioner was asking only about trivial matters, which might be dealt with in the way he mentioned, while great offences, such as those against a sovereign or a father, could not be dealt with by such an inversion of the principles of justice. In the second Book of the Li Chi there is the following passage:—'With the slayer of his father, a man may not live under the same heaven; against the slayer of his brother, a man must never have to go home to fetch a weapon; with the slayer of his friend, a man may not live in the same State 1.' The lex talionis is here laid down in its fullest extent. The Chau IA tells us of a provision made against the evil consequences of the principle, by the appointment of a minister called 'The Reconciler'.' The provision is very inferior to the cities of refuge which were set apart by Moses for the manslayer to flee to from the fury of the avenger. as it was, however, it existed, and it is remarkable that Confucius. when consulted on the subject, took no notice of it, but affirmed the duty of blood-revenge in the strongest and most unrestricted terms. His disciple Tsze-hsia asked him, 'What course is to be pursued in the case of the murder of a father or mother?' He replied, 'The son must sleep upon a matting of grass, with his shield for his pillow; he must decline to take office; he must not live under the same heaven with the slayer. When he meets him in the marketplace or the court, he must have his weapon ready to strike him.' 'And what is the course on the murder of a brother?' 'The surviving brother must not take office in the same State with the slayer; yet if he go on his prince's service to the State where the slayer is, though he meet him, he must not fight with him.' 'And what is the course on the murder of an uncle or a cousin?' 'In this case the nephew or cousin is not the principal. If the principal on whom the revenge devolves can take it, he has only to stand behind with his weapon in his hand, and support him?.'

Sir John Davis has rightly called attention to this as one of the objectionable principles of Confucius. The bad effects of it are evident even in the present day. Revenge is sweet to the Chinese. I have spoken of their readiness to submit to government, and wish to live in peace, yet they do not like to resign even to government the 'inquisition for blood.' Where the ruling authority is feeble, as it is at present, individuals and clans take the law into their own hands, and whole districts are kept in a state of constant feud and warfare.

But I must now leave the sage. I hope I have not done him injustice; the more I have studied his character and opinions, the more highly have I come to regard him. He was a very great man, and his influence has been on the whole a great benefit to the Chinese, while his teachings suggest important lessons to ourselves who profess to belong to the school of Christ.

SECTION III.

HIS IMMEDIATE DISCIPLES.

Sze-må Ch'ien makes Confucius say:—'The disciples who received my instructions, and could themselves comprehend them, were seventy-seven individuals. They were all scholars of extraordinary ability. The common saying is, that the disciples of the sage were three thousand, while among them there were seventy-two worthies. I propose to give here a list of all those whose names have come down to us, as being his followers. Of the greater number it will be seen that we know nothing more than their names and surnames. My principal authorities will be the 'Historical Records,' the 'Narratives of the School,' 'The Sacrificial Canon for the Sage's Temple, with Plates,' and the chapter on 'The Disciples of Confucius' prefixed to the 'Four Books, Text and Commentary, with Proofs and Illustrations.' In giving a few notices of the better-known individuals, I will endeavour to avoid what may be gathered from the Analects.

1. Yen Hûi, by designation Taze-yüan (寶 回, 字子淵). was a native of Lû, the favourite of his master, whose junior he was by thirty years, and whose disciple he became when he was quite a youth. 'After I got Hûi,' Confucius remarked, 'the disciples came closer to me.' We are told that once, when he found himself on the Nang hill with Hûi, Tsze-lû, and Tsze-kung, Confucius asked them to tell him their different aims, and he would choose between them. Tsze-lû began, and when he had done, the master said, 'It marks your bravery.' Tsze-kung followed, on whose words the judgment was. 'They show your discriminating eloquence.' At last came Yen Yuan, who said, 'I should like to find an intelligent king and sage ruler whom I might assist. I would diffuse among the people instructions on the five great points, and lead them on by the rules of propriety and music, so that they should not care to fortify their cities by walls and moats, but would fuse their swords and spears into implements of agriculture. They should send forth their flocks without fear into the plains and forests. There should be no sunderings of families, no widows or widowers. For a thousand years there would be no calamity of war. Yû would have no opportunity to display his bravery, or Ts'ze to display his oratory.' The master pronounced, 'How admirable is this virtue!'

When Hûi was twenty-nine, his hair was all white, and in three years more he died. He was sacrificed to, along with Confucius, by the first emperor of the Han dynasty. The title which he now has in the sacrificial Canon,—'Continuator of the Sage,' was conferred in the ninth year of the emperor, or, to speak more correctly, of the period, Chiâ-ching, A. D. 1530. Almost all the present sacrificial titles of the worthies in the temple were fixed at that time. Hûi's place is the first of the four Assessors, on the east of the sage 1.

2. Min Sun, styled Tsze-ch'ien (閔村,字子為). He was a native of Lû, fifteen years younger than Confucius, according to Sze-mâ Ch'ien, but fifty years younger, according to the 'Narratives of the School,' which latter authority is followed in 'The Annals of the Empire.' When he first came to Confucius, we are told, he had a starved look², which was by-and-by exchanged for one of fulness and satisfaction³. Tsze-kung asked him how the change had come about. He replied, 'I came from the midst of my reeds and sedges into the school of the master. He trained my mind to filial piety, and set before me the examples of the ancient kings. I felt a pleasure in his instructions; but when I went abroad, and saw the people in authority, with their umbrellas and banners, and all the pomp and circumstance of their trains, I also felt pleasure in that show. These two things assaulted each other in

I have referred briefly, at p. 91, to the temples of Confucius. The principal hall, called the first and Complete One, is that in which is his own statue or the tablet of his spirit, having on each side of it, within a screen, the statues, or tablets, of his 'four Assessors.' On the east and west, along the walls of the same apartment, are the two ff, the places of the fig., or 'twelve Wise Ones,' those of his disciples, who, next to the 'Assessors,' are counted worthy of honour. Outside this spartment, and running in a line with the two ff, but along the external wall of the smared inclosure, are the two ff, or side-galleries, which I have sometimes called the ranges of the outer court. In each there are sixty-four tablets of the disciples and other worthies, having the same title as the Wise Ones, that of ff, or 'Ancient Worthy,' or the inferior title of ff, 'Ancient Scholar.' Behind the principal hall is the finite inferior title of fronting the south, like that of Confucius's ancestors, whose tablets are in the centre, fronting the south, like that of Confucius. On each side are likewise the tablets of certain 'ancient Worthies,' and 'ancient Scholars.'

my breast. I could not determine which to prefer, and so I wore that look of distress. But now the lessons of our master have penetrated deeply into my mind. My progress also has been helped by the example of you my fellow-disciples. I now know what I should follow and what I should avoid, and all the pomp of power is no more to me than the dust of the ground. It is on this account that I have that look of fulness and satisfaction. Tsze-ch'ien was high in Confucius's esteem. He was distinguished for his purity and filial affection. His place in the temple is the first, east, among 'The Wise Ones,' immediately after the four assessors. He was first sacrificed to along with Confucius, as is to be understood of the other 'Wise Ones,' excepting in the case of Yû Zo, in the eighth year of the style K'aî-yuan of the sixth emperor of the Tang dynasty, A.D. 720. His title, the same as that of all but the Assessors, is-'The ancient Worthy, the philosopher Min.'

- 3. Zan Kang, styled Po-niû (冉耕, 字白 [al.百]牛). He was a native of Lû, and Confucius's junior only by seven years. When Confucius became minister of Crime, he appointed Po-niû to the office, which he had himself formerly held, of commandant of Chung-tû. His tablet is now fourth among 'The Wise Ones,' on the west.
- 4. Zan Yung, styled Chung-kung (冉雅,字仲号). He was of the same clan as Zan Kang, and twenty-nine years younger than Confucius. He had a bad father, but the master declared that was not to be counted to him, to detract from his admitted excellence. His place is among 'The Wise Ones,' the second, east.
- 5. Zan Ch'iû, styled Tsze-yû (用录, 字子有). He was related to the two former, and of the same age as Chung-kung. He was noted among the disciples for his versatile ability and many acquirements. Tsze-kung said of him, 'Respectful to the old, and kind to the young; attentive to guests and visitors; fond of learning and skilled in many arts; diligent in his examination of things:—these are what belong to Zan Ch'iû.' It has been noted in the life of Confucius that it was by the influence of Tsze-yû that he was finally restored to Lû. He occupies the third place, west, among 'The Wise Ones.'
- 6. Chung Yû, styled Tsze-lû and Chî-lû (仲由,字子路, 又字季路). He was a native of Pien (卞) in Lû, and only nine years younger than Confucius. At their first interview, the master asked him what he was fond of, and he replied, 'My long sword.' Confucius said, 'If to your present ability there were added the results of learning, you would be a very superior man.' 'Of what advantage would learning be to me?' asked Tsze-lû. 'There is a bamboo on the southern hill, which is straight itself without being bent. If you cut it down and use it, you can send it through a rhinoceros's hide; -what is the use of learning?' 'Yes,' said the master; 'but if you feather it and point it with steel, will it not penetrate more deeply?' Tsze-lû bowed twice, and said. 'I will reverently receive your instructions.' Confucius was wont to say. From the time that I got Yû, bad words no more came to my ears.' For some time Tsze-lû was chief magistrate of the district of P'û (清), where his administration commanded the warm commendations of the master. He died finally in Wei, His tablet is now the as has been related above, pp. 86, 87. fourth, east, from those of the Assessors.

7. Tsåi Yü, styled Tsze-wo (宰子,字子我). He was a native of Lû, but nothing is mentioned of his age. He had 'a sharp mouth,' according to Sze-må Ch'ien. Once, when he was at the court of Ch'û on some commission, the king Châo offered him an easy carriage adorned with ivory for his master. Yu replied, 'My master is a man who would rejoice in a government where right principles were carried out, and can find his joy in himself when that is not the case. Now right principles and virtue are as it were in a state of slumber. His wish is to rouse and put them in motion. Could he find a prince really anxious to rule according to them, he would walk on foot to his court, and be glad to do so. Why need he receive such a valuable gift as this from so great a distance?' Confucius commended this reply; but where he is mentioned in the Analects, Tsze-wo does not appear to great advantage. He took service in the State of Ch't, and was chief magistrate of Lin-taze, where he joined with Tien Chang in some disorderly movement, which led to the destruction of his kindred, and made Confucius ashamed of him. His tablet is now the second, west, among 'The Wise Ones.'

8. Twan-mu Ts'ze, styled Tsse-kung (端木駒,字子貢[al. 子赞]), whose place is now third, east, from the Assessors. He was a native of Wei (衛), and thirty-one years younger than Confucius. He had great quickness of natural ability, and appears in the Analects as one of the most forward talkers among the disciples. Confucius used to say, 'From the time that I got Ts'ze. scholars from a distance came daily resorting to me.' Several instances of the language which he used to express his admiration of the master have been given in the last section. Here is another: -The duke Ching of Ch'i asked Tsze-kung how Chung-ni was to be ranked as a sage. 'I do not know,' was the reply. 'I have all my life had the heaven over my head, but I do not know its height. and the earth under my feet, but I do not know its thickness. In my serving of Confucius, I am like a thirsty man who goes with his pitcher to the river, and there he drinks his fill, without knowing the river's depth.' He took leave of Confucius to become commandant of Hsin-yang (信 陽 宰), when the master said to him, 'In dealing with your subordinates, there is nothing like impartiality; and when wealth comes in your way, there is nothing like moderation. Hold fast these two things, and do not swerve from them. To conceal men's excellence is to obscure the worthy: and to proclaim people's wickedness is the part of a mean man. To speak evil of those whom you have not sought the opportunity to instruct is not the way of friendship and harmony.' Subsequently Tsze-kung was high in office both in Lû and Wei, and finally died in Ch'1. We saw how he was in attendance on Confucius at the time of the sage's death. Many of the disciples built huts near the master's grave, and mourned for him three years, but Tsze-kung remained sorrowing alone for three years more.

9. Yen Yen, styled Tsze-yû (言便,字子游), now the fourth in the western range of 'The Wise Ones.' He was a native of Wû (吳), forty-five years younger than Confucius, and distinguished for his literary acquirements. Being made commandant of Wû-ch'ang, he transformed the character of the people by 'proprieties' and music, and was praised by the master. After the death of Confucius, Chi K'ang asked Yen how that event had made no sensation like that which was made by the death of Tsze-ch'an, when the men laid aside their bowstring rings and girdle ornaments, and the women laid aside their pearls and ear-rings, and the voice of weeping was heard in the lanes for three months. Yen replied, 'The influences of Tsze-ch'an and my master might be compared to those of overflowing water and the fattening rain. Wherever the water in its overflow reaches, men take knowledge of it, while the fattening rain falls unobserved.'

- ro. Pû Shang, styled Tsze-hsiâ (卜商,字子夏). It is not certain to what State he belonged, his birth being assigned to Wei (稿), to Wei (魏), and to Wăn (混). He was forty-five years younger than Confucius, and lived to a great age, for we find him. B. C. 406, at the court of the prince Wăn of Wei (魏), to whom he gave copies of some of the classical Books. He is represented as a scholar extensively read and exact, but without great comprehension of mind. What is called Māo's Shih-ching (毛詩) is said to contain the views of Tsze-hsiâ. Kung-yang Kāo and Kū-liang Ch'ih are also said to have studied the Ch'un Ch'iù with him. On the occasion of the death of his son he wept himself blind. His place is the fifth, east, among 'The Wise Ones.'
- 11. Chwan-sun Shih, styled Tsze-chang (類孫師, 字子獎), has his tablet, corresponding to that of the preceding, on the west. He was a native of Ch'an (陳), and forty-eight years younger than Confucius. Tsze-kung said, 'Not to boast of his admirable merit; not to signify joy on account of noble station; neither insolent nor indolent; showing no pride to the dependent:—these are the characteristics of Chwan-sun Shih.' When he was sick, he called (his son) Shan-hsiang to him, and said, 'We speak of his end in the case of a superior man, and of his death in the case of a mean man. May I think that it is going to be the former with me to-day?'
- [al. 子鼠]). He was a native of south Wû-ch'ang, and forty-six years younger than Confucius. In his sixteenth year he was sent by his father into Ch'û, where Confucius then was, to learn under the saga. Excepting perhaps Yen Hûi, there is not a name of greater note in the Confucian school. Tsse-kung said of him, 'There is no subject which he has not studied. His appearance is respectful. His virtue is solid. His words command credence. Before great men he draws himself up in the pride of self-respect. His eyebrows are those of longevity.' He was noted for his filial piety, and after the death of his parents, he could not read the rites of mourning without being led to think of them, and moved to tears. He was a voluminous writer. Ten Books of his composition are said to be contained in the 'Rites of the elder Tai'

- (大東帝). The Classic of Filial Piety he is said to have made under the eye of Confucius. On his connexion with 'The Great Learning,' see above, Ch. III. Sect. II. He was first associated with the sacrifices to Confucius in A.D. 668, but in 1267 he was advanced to be one of the sage's four Assessors. His title—'Exhibitor of the Fundamental Principles of the Sage,' dates from the period of Chia-ching, as mentioned in speaking of Yen Hûi.
- 13. Tan-t'âi Mieh-ming, styled Tsze-yü (澹 臺 滅 明, 字 子刻). He was a native of Wû-ch'ăng, thirty-nine years younger than Confucius, according to the 'Historical Records,' but fortynine, according to the 'Narratives of the School.' He was excessively ugly, and Confucius thought meanly of his talents in consequence, on his first application to him. After completing his studies, he travelled to the south as far as the Yang-tsze. Traces of his presence in that part of the country are still pointed out in the department of Sû-châu. He was followed by about three hundred disciples, to whom he laid down rules for their guidance in their intercourse with the princes. When Confucius heard of his success, he confessed how he had been led by his bad looks to misjudge him. He, with nearly all the disciples whose names follow, first had a place assigned to him in the sacrifices to Confucius in A.D. 739. The place of his tablet is the second, east, in the outer court, beyond that of the 'Assessors' and 'Wise Ones.'
- 14. Corresponding to the preceding, on the west, is the tablet of Fû Pû-ch'î, styled Tsze-tsien (宏 [al. 密 and 志, all = 伏] 不齊,字子殿). He was a native of Lû, and, according to different accounts, thirty, forty, and forty-nine years younger than Confucius. He was commandant of Tan-fû (單 父 字), and hardly needed to put forth any personal effort. Wû-mâ Ch'î had been in the same office, and had succeeded by dint of the greatest industry and toil. He asked Pû-ch'î how he managed so easily for himself, and was answered, 'I employ men; you employ men's strength.' People pronounced Fû to be a superior man. He was also a writer, and his works are mentioned in Liû Hsin's Catalogue.
- . 15. Next to that of Mieh-ming is the tablet of Yuan Hsien, styled Tsze-sze (原憲,字子思), a native of Sung, or, according to Chang Hsuan, of Lû, and younger than Confucius by thirty-six years. He was noted for his purity and modesty, and for his happiness in the principles of the master amid deep poverty. After the death of Confucius, he lived in obscurity in Wei. In the notes to Ana. VI. iii, I have referred to an interview which he had with Tsze-kung.

- 16. Kung-yê Ch'ang [al. Chih], styled Tsze-ch'ang [al. Tsze-chih], (公冶長 [al. 芝], 字子長 [al. 子之]), has his tablet next to that of Pû-ch'î. He was son-in-law to Confucius. His nativity is assigned both to Lû and to Ch'î.
- 17. Nan-kung Kwo, styled Tsze-yung (南宫括 [al. 适 and, in the 'Narratives of the School,' 稻 (Tâo)], 字子容), has the place at the east next to Yüan Hsien. It is a question much debated whether he was the same with Nan-kung Chăng-shû, who accompanied Confucius to the court of Châu, or not. On occasion of a fire breaking out in the palace of duke Âi, while others were intent on securing the contents of the Treasury, Nan-kung directed his efforts to save the Library, and to him was owing the preservation of the copy of the Châu Lî which was in Lû, and other ancient monuments.
- 18. Kung-hsî Âi, styled Chî-ts'ze [al. Chî-ch'ăn] (公哲京, 字季大 [al.季沅]). His tablet follows that of Kung-yê. He was a native of Lû, or of Ch'î. Confucius commended him for refusing to take office with any of the Families which were encroaching on the authority of the princes of the States, and for choosing to endure the severest poverty rather than sacrifice a tittle of his principles.
- 19. Tsăng Tien, styled Hsî (會 蔵 [al. 點], 字 皙). He was the father of Tsăng Shăn. His place in the temples is the hall to Confucius's ancestors, where his tablet is the first, west.
- 20. Yen Wû-yâo, styled Lû (資無器,字路). He was the father of Yen Hûi, younger than Confucius by six years. His sacrificial place is the first, east, in the same hall as the last.
- 21. Following the tablet of Nan-kung Kwo is that of Shang Chu, styled Tsze-mû (商星,字子木). To him, it is said, we are indebted for the preservation of the Yi-ching, which he received from Confucius. Its transmission step by step, from Chu down to the Han dynasty, is minutely set forth.
- 22. Next to Kung-hat Ai is the place of Kao Ch'ai, styled Tsze-kao and Chi-kao (高樂,字子羔 [al.季羔; for 羔 moreover, we find 舉, and 嬰]), a native of Ch'i, according to the 'Narratives of the School, but of Wei, according to Sze-mâ Ch'ien and Chang Hsuan. He was thirty (some say forty) years younger than Confucius, dwarfish and ugly, but of great worth and ability. At one time he was criminal judge of Wei, and in the execution of his office condemned a prisoner to lose his feet. Afterwards that same man saved his life, when he was flying from the State. Confucius praised Ch'âi for being able to administer stern justice with such a spirit of benevolence as to disarm resentment.

- 23. Shang Chü is followed by Ch'i-tiâo K'âi [prop. Ch'i], styled Tsze-k'âi, Tsze-zo, and Tsze-hsiû (洛雕 開 [pr. 政], 字子開, 子若, and 子脩), a native of Ts'âi (蔡), or, according to Chẳng Hsüan, of Lû. We only know him as a reader of the Shû-ching, and refusing to go into office.
- 24. Kung-po Liâo, styled Tsze-châu (公伯僚,字子周). He appears in the Analects, XIV. xxxiii, slandering Tsze-lû. It is doubtful whether he should have a place among the disciples.
- 25. Sze-må Kăng, styled Tsze-niú (司馬耕, 字子牛), follows Ch'i-tiâo K'âi; also styled 黎耕. He was a great talker, a native of Sung, and a brother of Hwan T'ûi, to escape from whom seems to have been the labour of his life.
- 26. The place next Kảo Ch'ải is occupied by Fan Hsü, styled Tsze-ch'ih (类須,字子運), a native of Ch'î, or, according to others, of Lû, and whose age is given as thirty-six and forty-six years younger than Confucius. When young, he distinguished himself in a military command under the Chi family.
- 27. Yû Zo, styled Tsze-zo (有若, 字子岩). He was a native of Lû, and his age is stated very variously. He was noted among the disciples for his great memory and fondness for antiquity. After the death of Confucius, the rest of the disciples, because of some likeness in Zo's speech to the Master, wished to render the same observances to him which they had done to Confucius, but on Tsăng Shăn's demurring to the thing, they abandoned the purpose. The tablet of Tsze-zo is now the sixth, east, among 'The Wise Ones,' to which place it was promoted in the third year of Ch'lenlung of the present dynasty. This was done in compliance with a memorial from the president of one of the Boards, who said he was moved by a dream to make the request. We may suppose that his real motives were—a wish to do justice to the merits of Tsze-zo, and to restore the symmetry of the tablets in the 'Hall of the Great and Complete One,' which had been disturbed by the introduction of the tablet of Chû Hsî in the preceding reign.

- 28. Kung-hsî Ch'ih, styled Tsze-hwâ (公西赤,字子華), a native of Lû, younger than Confucius by forty-two years, whose place is the fourth, west, in the outer court. He was noted for his knowledge of ceremonies, and the other disciples devolved on him all the arrangements about the funeral of the Master.
- 29. Wû-mâ Shih [or Ch'î], styled Tsze-Ch'î (巫馬施 [al. 期], 字子期 [al. 子旗]), a native of Ch'ăn, or, according to Chăng Hsüan, of Lû, thirty years younger than Confucius. His tablet is on the east, next to that of Sze-mâ Kăng. It is related that on one occasion, when Confucius was about to set out with a company of the disciples on a walk or journey, he told them to take umbrellas. They met with a heavy shower, and Wû-mâ asked him, saying, 'There were no clouds in the morning; but after the sun had risen, you told us to take umbrellas. How did you know that it would rain?' Confucius said, 'The moon last evening was in the constellation Pî, and is it not said in the Shih-ching, "When the moon is in Pî, there will be heavy rain?" It was thus I knew it.'
- 30. Liang Chan [al. Li], styled Shû-yti (梁 篇 [al. 經] 字 权 無), occupies the eighth place, west, among the tablets of the outer court. He was a man of Ch'i, and his age is stated as twenty-nine and thirty-nine years younger than Confucius. The following story is told in connexion with him.—When he was thirty, being disappointed that he had no son, he was minded to put away his wife. 'Do not do so,' said Shang Chu to him. 'I was thirty-eight before I had a son, and my mother was then about to take another wife for me, when the Master proposed sending me to Ch'i. My mother was unwilling that I should go, but Confucius said, 'Don't be anxious. Chu will have five sons after he is forty.' It has turned out so, and I apprehend it is your fault, and not your wife's, that you have no son yet.' Chan took this advice, and in the second year after, he had a son.
- 31. Yen Hsing [al. Hsin, Liû, and Wei], styled Taze-liû (資本 [al. 辛, 柳, and 章], 字子柳), occupies the place, east, after Wûmâ Shih. He was a native of Lû, and forty-six years younger than Confucius.
- 32. Liang Chan is followed on the west by Zan Zû, styled Tsze-lû [al. Tsze-tsăng and Tsze-yü] (冉 鬟 [al. 儒] 字子 魯 [al. 子曾 and 子魚]), a native of Lû, and fifty years younger than Confucius.

- 33. Yen Hsing is followed on the east by Ts'ao Hsu, styled Tsze-hsun (曹卓,字子循), a native of Ts'ai, fifty years younger than Confucius.
- 34. Next on the west is Po Ch'ien, styled Tsze-hsî, or, in the current copies of the 'Narratives of the School,' Tsze-ch'iâi (伯皮, 字子晳[al. 子析] or 子档), a native of Lû, fifty years younger than Confucius.
- 35. Following Tsze-hsün is Kung-sun Lung [al. Ch'ung], styled Tsze-shih (公孫龍[al.龍],字子石), whose birth is assigned by different writers to Wei, Ch'û, and Châo (趙). He was fifty-three years younger than Confucius. We have the following account:—'Tsze-kung asked Tsze-shih, saying, "Have you not learned the Book of Poetry?" Tsze-shih replied, "What leisure have I to do so? My parents require me to be filial; my brothers require me to be submissive; and my friends require me to be sincere. What leisure have I for anything else?" "Come to my Master," said Tsze-kung, "and learn of him."

Sze-må Ch'ien here observes:—'Of the thirty-five disciples which precede, we have some details. Their age and other particulars are found in the Books and Records. It is not so, however, in regard to the fifty-two which follow.'

- 36. Zan Chi, styled Tsze-ch'an [al. Chi-ch'an and Tsze-th] (冉季,字子產[al.季產 and 子達]), a native of Lû, whose place is the 11th, west, next to Po Ch'ien.
- 37. Kung-tsů Kau-tsze or simply Tsze, styled Tsze-chih (公祖 勾 兹 [or simply 兹], 字 子之), a native of Lû. His tablet is the 23rd, east, in the outer court.
- 38. Ch'in Tsû, styled Tsze-nan (秦祖, 字子南), a native of Ch'in. His tablet precedes that of the last, two places.
- 39. Ch'i-tiào Ch'ih, styled Tsze-lien (漆雕 眵 [al. 侈], 字子 飲), a native of Lû. His tablet is the 13th, west.
- 40. Yen Kao, styled Tsze-chiao (類高字子廳). According to the 'Narratives of the School,' he was the same as Yen Ko (刻, or 起), who drove the carriage when Confucius rode in Wei after the duke and Nan-tsze. But this seems doubtful. Other authorities make his name Ch'an (產), and style him Tsze-tsing (子精). His tablet is the 13th, east.

- 41. Ch'î-tiâo T'û-fû [al. Ts'ung], styled Tsze-yû, Tsze-ch'î, and Tsze-wăn (溶雕徒父[al. 從], 字子有 or 子友[al. 子期 and 子文]), a native of Lû, whose tablet precedes that of Ch'i-tiâo Ch'ih.
- 42. Zang Sze-ch'ih, styled Tsze-t'û, or Tsze-ts'ung (褒 [al. 穰] 駟 赤, 字子徒 [al. 子從]), a native of Ch'in. Some consider Zang-sze (褒 駟) to be a double surname. His tablet comes after that of No. 40.
- 43. Shang Châi, styled Tsze-chî and Tsze-hsiû (商澤,字子季 [al. 子秀]), a native of Lû. His tablet is immediately after that of Fan Hsü, No. 26.
- 44. Shih Tso [al. Chih and Tsze]-shû, styled Tsze-ming (石作[al. 之 and 子], 蜀, 字子明). Some take Shih-tso (石作) as a double surname. His tablet follows that of No. 42.
- 45. Zăn Pû-ch'î, styled Hsüan (任不齊,字選), a native of Ch'û, whose tablet is next to that of No. 28.
- 46. Kung-liang Zû, styled Tsze-chăng (公民篇[al. 儒],字子正), a native of Ch'in, follows the preceding in the temples. The 'Sacrificial Canon' says:—'Tsze-chăng was a man of worth and bravery. When Confucius was surrounded and stopped in Pû, Tsze-chăng fought so desperately, that the people of Pû were afraid, and let the Master go, on his swearing that he would not proceed to Wei.'
- 47. Hâu [al. Shih] Ch'û [al. Ch'ien], styled Tsze-li [al. Li-chih] (后 [al. 石] 處 [al. 虔], 字子里 [al. 里之]), a native of Ch'i, having his tablet the 17th, east.
- 48. Ch'in Zan, styled K'ài (秦 冉, 字 開), a native of Ts'ài. He is not given in the list of the 'Narratives of the School,' and on this account his tablet was put out of the temples in the ninth year of Chiâ-tsing. It was restored, however, in the second year of Yung-chang, A.D. 1724, and is the 33rd, east, in the outer court.
- 49. Kung-haid Shau, styled Shang [and Tsze-shang] (公夏首 [al. 守], 字乘 [and 子乘]), a native of Lt, whose tablet is next to that of No. 44.
 - 50. Hsi Yung-tien [or simply Tien], styled Tsze-hsi [al. Tszechieh and Tsze-ch'îeh] (系容蔵[or 點], 字子晳[al. 子偕and 子楷]), a native of Wei, having his tablet the 18th, east.

- 51. Kung Chien-ting [al. Kung Yû], styled Tsze-chung (公肩 [al. 堅] 定 [al. 公有], 字子仲 [al. 中 and 忠]). His nativity is assigned to Lû, to Wei, and to Tsin (晉). He follows No. 46.
- 52. Yen Tsû [al. Hsiang], styled Hsiang and Tsze-hsiang (類亂 [al. 相], 字要, and 子要), a native of Lû, with his tablet following that of No. 50.
- 53. Chiáo Tan [al. Wů], styled Tsze-këa (桑K單 [al. 島], 字子家), a native of Lû. His place is next to that of No. 51.
- 54. Chü [al. Kâu] Tsing-ch'iang [and simply Tsing], styled Tsze-ch'iang [al. Tsze-chieh and Tsze-măng] (句 [al. 勾 and 鉤] 井 疆 [and simply 井], 字 子 疆 [al. 子 界 and 子 孟]), a native of Wei, following No. 52.
- 55. Han [al. Tsåi]-fû Hêi, styled Tsze-hêi [al. Tsze-so and Tsze-sû] (罕 [al. 宰] 父黑,字子黑 [al.子索 and 子素]), a native of Lû, whose tablet is next to that of No. 53.
- 56. Ch'in Shang, styled Tsze-p'ei [al. P'ei-tsze and Pû-tsze] (秦商,字子丞 [al. 丞兹 and 承兹]), a native of Lû, or, according to Chang Hsüan, of Ch'û. He was forty years younger than Confucius. One authority, however, says he was only four years younger, and that his father and Confucius's father were both celebrated for their strength. His tablet is the 12th, east.
- 57. Shin Tang, styled Châu (申黨字周). In the 'Narratives of the School' there is a Shin Chî, styled Tsze-châu (申稿,字子周). The name is given by others as T'ang (堂 and 儒) and Tsû (續), with the designation Tsze-tsû (子續). These are probably the same person mentioned in the Analects as Shin Ch'ang (申帳). Prior to the Ming dynasty they were sacrificed to as two, but in A.D. 1530, the name Tang was expunged from the sacrificial list, and only that of Ch'ang left. His tablet is the 31st, east.
- 58. Yen Chih-p'o, styled Tsze-shû [or simply Shû] (顏之僕,字子叔 [or simply 叔]), a native of Lû, who occupies the 29th place, east.
- 59. Yung Ch'î, styled Tsze-ch'î [al. Tsze-yen] (榮旂 [or 新], 字子旗 or 子祺 [al. 子顏]), a native of Lû, whose tablet is the 20th, west.

- 60. Hsien Ch'ang, styled Tsze-ch'l [al. Tsze-hung] (縣成,字子祺 [al. 子橫]), a native of Lû. His place is the 22nd, east.
- 61. Tso Zān-ying [or simply Ying], styled Hsing and Tsze-hsing (左人郢 [or simply 郢], 字行 and 子行), a native of Lû. His tablet follows that of No. 59.
- 62. Yen Chi, styled An [al. Tsze-sze] (兼 仮 [or 級], 字 恩 [al. 子思]), a native of Chin. His tablet is the 24th, east.
- 63. Chẳng Kwo, styled Tsze-t'û (鄭國,字子徒), a native of Lû. This is understood to be the same with the Hsieh Pang, styled Tsze-ts'ung (薛邦,字子從), of the 'Narratives of the School.' His tablet follows No. 61.
- 64. Ch'in Fei, styled Tsze-chih (秦 非, 字子之), a native of Lû, having his tablet the 31st, west.
- 65. Shih Chih-ch'ang, styled Tsze-hang [al. ch'ang] (施之常, 字子 [al. 常]), a native of Lû. His tablet is the 30th, east.
- 66. Yen K'wâi, styled Tsze-shǎng (寶噜,字子聲), a native of Lû. His tablet is the next to that of No. 64.
- 67. Pû Shû-shăng, styled Tsze-ch'ê (步 权 秉 [in the 'Narratives of the School' we have an old form of 秉], 字子車), a native of Ch'i. Sometimes for Pû (步) we find Shao (少). His tablet is the 30th, west.
- 68. Yüan K'ang, styled Tsze-chi (原元, 字子籍), a native of Lû. Sze-mâ Ch'ien calls him Yüan K'ang-chi, not mentioning any designation. The 'Narratives of the School' makes him Yttan K'ang (抗), styled Chi. His tablet is the 23rd, west.
- 69. Yo K'o [al. Hsin], styled Tsze-shang (樂 教 [al. 欣], 字 子 影), a native of Lû. His tablet is the 25th, east.
- 70. Lien Chieh, styled Yung and Tsze-yung [al. Tsme-ts'40] (廉潔,字庸 and 子庸 [al.子曹]), a native of Wei, or of Ch't. His tablet is next to that of No. 68.
- 71. Shû-chung Hûi [al. K'wâi], styled Tsze-chǐ (水 体會 [al. K'wâi], 字子期), a native of Lû, or, according to Chẳng Hstian, of Tsin. He was younger than Confucius by fifty-four years. It is said that he and another youth, called K'ung Hstian (孔 疏), attended by turns with their pencils, and acted as amanuenses to the sage, and when Mäng Wû-po expressed a doubt of their competency, Confucius declared his satisfaction with them. He follows Lien Chieh in the temples.

- 72. Yen Ho, styled Zan (顏 何, 字 冉), a native of Lû. The present copies of the 'Narratives of the School' do not contain this name, and in A.D. 1588 Zan was displaced from his place in the temples. His tablet, however, has been restored during the present dynasty. It is the 33rd, west.
- 73. Tì Hêi, styled Chê [al. Tsze-chê and Chê-chih] (秋黑, 字哲 [al. 子哲 and 哲之]), a native of Wei, or of Lû. His tablet is the 26th, east.
- 74. Kwei [al. Pang] Sun, styled Tsze-lien [al. Tsze-yin] (邽 [al. 邦] 異, 字子 歛 [al. 子飲]), a native of Lû. His tablet is the 27th, west.
- 75. K'ung Chung, styled Tsze-mieh (礼 忠, 字子 茂). This was the son, it is said, of Confucius's elder brother, the cripple Mang-p'i. His tablet is next to that of No. 73. His sacrificial title is 'The ancient Worthy, the philosopher Mieh.'
- 76. Kung-hsi Yü-zû [al. Yü], styled Tsze-shang (公西奥加[al. 興],字子上), a native of Lû. His place is the 26th, west.
- 77. Kung-hsi Tien, styled Tsze-shang (公西蔵 [or 點], 字子上[al. 子尚]), a native of Lû. His tablet is the 28th, east.
- 78. Ch'in Chang [al. Lao], styled Tsze-k'âi (琴 張 [al. 牢], 字子開), a native of Wei. His tablet is the 29th, west.
- 79. Ch'an K'ang, styled Tsze-k'ang [al. Tsze-ch'in] (陳 亢, 字 子 元 [al. 子 食]), a native of Ch'an. See notes on Ana. I. x.
- 80. Hsien Tan [al. Tan-fû and Fang], styled Tsze-hsiang (縣 宣[al. 宣炎 and 豊], 字子象), a native of Lû. Some suppose that this is the same as No. 53. The advisers of the present dynasty in such matters, however, have considered them to be different, and in 1724, a tablet was assigned to Hsien Tan, the 34th, west.

The three preceding names are given in the 'Narratives of the School'

The research of scholars has added about twenty others.

- 81. Lin Fang, styled Tsze-ch'iû (林放, 字子邱), a native of Lû. The only thing known of him is from the Ana. III. iv. His tablet was displaced under the Ming, but has been restored by the present dynasty It is the first, west.
- 82. Chu Yuan, styled Po-yu (蹇瑗,字伯玉), an officer of Wei, and, as appears from the Analects and Mencius, an intimate friend of Confucius. Still his tablet has shared the same changes as that of Lin Fang. It is now the first, east.

- 83 and 84. Shăn Ch'ang (申 极) and Shăn Tang (申 堂). See No. 57.
- 85. Mû Pî (女 皮), mentioned by Mencius, VII. Pt. II. xxxvii. 4. His entrance into the temple has been under the present dynasty. His tablet is the 34th, east.
- 86. Tso Ch'iù-ming or Tso-ch'iù Ming (左氏明) has the 32nd place, east. His title was fixed in A.D. 1530 to be—'The Ancient Scholar,' but in 1642 it was raised to that of 'Ancient Worthy.' To him we owe the most distinguished of the annotated editions of the Ch'un Ch'iù. But whether he really was a disciple of Confucius, and in personal communication with him, is much debated.

The above are the only names and surnames of those of the disciples who now share in the sacrifices to the sage. Those who wish to exhaust the subject, mention in addition, on the authority of Tso Ch'iû-ming, Chung-sun Ho-chi (仲孫何忌), a son of Mang Hsî (see p. 63), and Chung-sun Shwo (仲孫說), also a son of Mang Hsî, supposed by many to be the same with No. 17; Zû Pei, (嘉悲), mentioned in the Analects, XVII. xx, and in the Li Chi, XVIII. Sect. II. ii. 22; Kung-wang Chih-ch'iù (公肖之裘) and Hsu Tien (序點), mentioned in the Li Chi, XLIII. 7; Pin-mau Chia (賽牟賈), mentioned in the Li Chi, XVII. iii. 16; Kung Hsuan (孔子旋) and Hûi Shû-lan (惠 权 蘭), on the authority of the 'Narratives of the School;' Ch'ang Chi (常季), mentioned by Chwang-taze; Chu Yu (鞫語), mentioned by Yen-taze (晏子); Lien Yu (廉 瑞) and Lu Chun (魯峻), on the authority of 文 翕 石室; and finally Tsze-fû Ho (子屬何), the Tsze-fû Ching-po (子服景伯) of the Analects, XIV. xxxviii.

CHAPTER VI.

LIST OF THE PRINCIPAL WORKS WHICH HAVE BEEN CONSULTED IN THE PREPARATION OF THIS VOLUME.

SECTION I.

CHINESE WORKS, WITH BRIEF NOTICES.

十三經註疏, 'The Thirteen Ching, with Commentary and Explanationa,' This is the great repertory of ancient lore upon the Classics. On the Analects, it contains the 'Collection of Explanations of the Lun Yü,' by Ho Yen and others (see p. 19), and 'The Correct Meaning,' or Paraphrase of Hsing Ping (see p. 20). On the Great Learning and the Doctrine of the Mean, it contains the comments and glosses of Chang Hsüan, and of Kung Ying-ta (孔類達) of the Tang dynasty.

新刻地縣四書資本, 'A new edition of the Four Books, Punctuated and Annotated, for Reading.' This work was published in the seventh year of Tâo-kwang (1827) by a Kâo Lin (高琳). It is the finest edition of the Four Books which I have seen, in point of typographical execution. It is indeed a volume for reading. It contains the ordinary 'Collected Comments' of Chû Hst on the Analects, and his 'Chapters and Sentences' of the Great Learning and Doctrine of the Mean. The editor's own notes are at the top and bottom of the page, in rubric.

四書朱子本義匯參, 'The Proper Meaning of the Four Books as determined by Chû Hsî, Compared with, and Illustrated from, other Commentators.' This is a most voluminous work, published in the tenth year of Chien-lung, A.D. 1745, by Wang Pûching (王步青), a member of the Han-lin College. On the Great Learning and the Doctrine of the Mean, the 'Queries' (或問) addressed to Chû Hsî and his replies are given in the same text as the standard commentary.

四書經註集證, 'The Four Books, Text and Commentary, with Proofs and Illustrations.' The copy of this Work which I have was edited by a Wang Ting-cht (汪廷樓), in the third year of Chiâ-ch'ing, A D. 1798. It may be called a commentary on the commentary. The research in all matters of Geography, History, Biography, Natural History, &c., is immense.

四書 諸儒輯要, 'A Collection of the most important Comments of Scholars on the Four Books.' By Li P'ei-lin (李沛霖); published in the fifty-seventh K'ang-hst year, A. D. 1718. This Work is about as voluminous as the 题象, but on a different plan. Every chapter is preceded by a critical discussion of its general meaning, and the logical connexion of its several paragraphs. This is followed by the text, and Cht Hst's standard commentary. We have then a paraphrase, full and generally perspicuous. Next, there is a selection of approved comments, from a great variety of authors; and finally, the reader finds a number of critical remarks and ingenious views, differing often from the common interpretation, which are submitted for his examination.

四書異註論文, 'A Supplemental Commentary, and Literary Discussions, on the Four Books.' By Chang Chăn-t'âo [al. Ti-an] (張頸陶[al. 楊春]), a member of the Han-lin college, in the early part, apparently, of the reign of Ch'ien-lung. The work is on a peculiar plan. The reader is supposed to be acquainted with Chû Hsî's commentary, which is not given; but the author generally supports his views, and defends them against the criticisms of some of the early scholars of this dynasty. His own exercitations are of the nature of essays more than of commentary. It is a book for the student who is somewhat advanced, rather than for the learner. I have often perused it with interest and advantage.

四書達註合識, 'The Four Books, according to the Commentary, with Paraphrase.' Published in the eighth year of Yung Chăng, A.D. 1730, by Wăng Fû [al. K'ch-fû] (倉 復 [al. 克夫]). Every page is divided into two parts. Below, we have the text and Chû Hsû's commentary. Above, we have an analysis of every chapter, followed by a paraphrase of the several paragraphs. To the paraphrase of each paragraph are subjoined critical notes, digested from a great variety of scholars, but without the mention of their names. A list of 116 is given who are thus laid under contribution. In addition, there are maps and illustrative figures at the commencement; and to each Book there are prefixed biographical notices, explanations of peculiar allusions, &c.

新增四書補註附考備台, 'The Four Books, with a VOL, I,

Complete Digest of Supplements to the Commentary, and additional Suggestions. A new edition, with Additions.' By To Ting-chi (杜 定基). Published A.D. 1779. The original of this Work was by Tăng Lin (野林), a scholar of the Ming dynasty. It is perhaps the best of all editions of the Four Books for a learner. Each page is divided into three parts. Below, is the text divided into sentences and members of sentences, which are followed by short glosses. The text is followed by the usual commentary, and that by a paraphrase, to which are subjoined the Supplements and Suggestions. The middle division contains a critical analysis of the chapters and paragraphs; and above, there are the necessary biographical and other notes.

四書味根錄, 'The Four Books, with the Relish of the Radical Meaning.' This is a new Work, published in 1852. It is the production of Chin Ch'ang, styled Chi'ú-t'an (金 凌, 字秋潭), an officer and scholar, who, returning, apparently to Canton province, from the North in 1836, occupied his retirement with reviewing his literary studies of former years, and employed his sons to transcribe his notes. The writer is fully up in all the commentaries on the Classics, and pays particular attention to the labours of the scholars of the present dynasty. To the Analects, for instance, there is prefixed Chiang Yung's History of Confucius, with criticisms on it by the author himself. Each chapter is preceded by a critical analysis. Then follows the text with the standard commentary, carefully divided into sentences, often with glosses, original and selected, between them. To the commentary there succeeds a paraphrase, which is not copied by the author from those of his predecessors. After the paraphrase we have Explanations (34). The book is beautifully printed, and in small type, so that it is really a multum in parvo, with considerable freshness.

日講四書義解, 'A Paraphrase for Daily Lessons, Explaining the Meaning of the Four Books.' This work was produced in 1677, by a department of the members of the Han-lin college, in obedience to an imperial rescript. The paraphrase is full, perspicuous, and elegant.

御製周易折中; 書經傳說葉纂; 詩經傳說葉纂; 禮配義疏; 春秋傳說葉纂. These works form together a superb edition of the Five Ching, published by imperial authority in the K'ang-hsi and Yung-chang reigns. They contain the standard views (傳); various opinions (說); critical decisions of the editors (曼); prolegomena; plates or cuts; and other apparatus for the student.

毛西河先生全集, 'The Collected Writings of Mão Hshho.' See prolegomena, p. 20. The voluminousness of his Writings is understated there. Of 經集, or Writings on the Classics, there are 236 sections, while his 文集, or other literary compositions, amount to 257 sections. His treatises on the Great Learning and the Doctrine of the Mean have been especially helpful to me. He is a great opponent of Chû Hsî, and would be a much more effective one, if he possessed the same graces of style as that 'prince of literature.'

四書拓餘說, 'A Collection of Supplemental Observations on the Four Books.' The preface of the author, Ts'ao Chih-shang (曹之升), is dated in 1795, the last year of the reign of Ch'ienlung. The work contains what we may call prolegomena on each of the Four Books, and then excursus on the most difficult and disputed passages. The tone is moderate, and the learning displayed extensive and solid. The views of Chu Hsi are frequently well defended from the assaults of Mao Hsi-ho. I have found the Work very instructive.

那當考, 'On the Tenth Book of the Analects, with Plates.' This Work was published by the author, Chiang Yung (江京), in the twenty-first Ch'ien-lung year, A.D. 1761, when he was seventy-six years old. It is devoted to the illustration of the above portion of the Analects, and is divided into ten sections, the first of which consists of woodcuts and tables. The second contains the Life of Confucius, of which I have largely availed myself in the preceding chapter. The whole is a remarkable specimen of the minute care with which Chinese scholars have illustrated the Classical Books.

四書釋地;四書釋地續;四書釋地及讀;四書釋地又讀;四書釋地三續. We may call these volumes—'The Topography of the Four Books; with three Supplements.' The Author's name is Yen Zo-ch'u (图 若 環). The first volume was published in 1698, and the second in 1700. I have not been able to find the dates of publication of the other two, in which there is more biographical and general matter than topographical The author apologizes for the inappropriateness of their titles by saying that he could not help calling them Supplements to the Topography, which was his 'first love.'

皇清經解, 'Explanations of the Classics, under the Imperial Ts'ing Dynasty.' See above, p. 20. The Work, however, was not published, as I have there supposed, by imperial authority, but under the superintendence, and at the expense (aided by other officers), of Yüan Yüan (瓦元), Governor-general of Kwang-tung and Kwang-hst, in the ninth year of the last reign, 1829. The publication of so extensive a Work shows a public spirit and zeal for literature among the high officers of China, which should keep foreigners from thinking meanly of them.

孔子家語, 'Sayings of the Confucian Family.' Family is to be taken in the sense of Sect or School. In Liû Hsin's Catalogue, in the subdivision devoted to the Lun Yü, we find the entry: -- 'Sayings of the Confucian Family, twenty-seven Books,' with a note by Yen Sze-kû of the Tang dynasty,—'Not the existing Work called the Family Sayings.' The original Work was among the treasures found in the wall of Confucius's old house, and was deciphered and edited by Kung An-kwo. The present Work is by Wang Sû of the Wei (魏) dynasty, grounded professedly on the older one, the blocks of which had suffered great dilapidation during the intervening centuries. It is allowed also, that, since Sû's time, the Work has suffered more than any of the acknowledged Classics. Yet it is a very valuable fragment of antiquity, and it would be worth while to incorporate it with the Analects. My copy is the edition of La Yung (李容), published in 1780. I have generally called the Work 'Narratives of the School'

聖廟祀典圖考, 'Sacrificial Canon of the Sage's Temples, with Plates.' This Work, published in 1826, by Kû Yûan, styled Hsiang-châu (顧沅,字湘舟), is a very painstaking account of all the Names sacrificed to in the temples of Confucius, the dates of their attaining to that honour, &c. There are appended to it Memoirs of Confucius and Mencius, which are not of so much value.

十子全書, 'The Complete Works of the Ten Tsze.' See Morrison's Dictionary, under the character 子. I have only had occasion, in connexion with this Work, to refer to the writings of Chwang-tsze (莊子) and Lieh-tsze (列子). My copy is an edition of 1804.

歷代名賢列女氏姓譜, 'A Cyclopædia of Surnames, or Biographical Dictionary, of the Famous Men and Virtuous Women of the Successive Dynasties.' This is a very notable work of its class; published in 1793, by 蕭智漢, and extending through 157 chapters or Books.

文獻通考, 'General Examination of Records and Scholars.' This astonishing Work, which cost its author, Ma Twan-lin (馬端), twenty years' labour, was first published in 1321. Rémusat says—'This excellent Work is a library in itself, and if Chinese literature possessed no other, the language would be worth learning for the sake of reading this alone.' It does indeed display all but incredible research into every subject connected with the Government, History, Literature, Religion, &c., of the empire of China. The author's researches are digested in 348 Books. I have had occasion to consult principally those on the Literary Monuments, embraced in seventy-six Books, from the 174th to the 249th.

朱 尊 藝 義 考, 'An Examination of the Commentaries on the Classics,' by Chû Î-tsun. The author was a member of the Hanlin college, and the work was first published with an imperial preface by the Ch'ien-lung emperor. It is an exhaustive work on the literature of the Classics, in 300 chapters or Books.

演文獻通考, 'A Continuation of the General Examination of Records and Scholars.' This Work, which is in 254 Books, and nearly as extensive as the former, was the production of Wang Ch'i (王圻), who dates his preface in 1586, the fourteenth year of Wan-li, the style of the reign of the fourteenth emperor of the Ming dynasty. Wang Ch'i brings down the Work of his predecessor to his own times. He also frequently goes over the same ground, and puts things in a clearer light. I have found this to be the case in the chapters on the classical and other Books.

二十四史, 'The Twenty-four Histories.' These are the imperially-authorized records of the empire, commencing with the 'Historical Records,' the work of Sze-ma Ch'ien, and ending with the History of the Ming dynasty, which appeared in 1742, the result of the joint labours of 145 officers and scholars of the present dynasty. The extent of the collection may be understood from this. that my copy, bound in English fashion, makes sixty-three volumes, each one larger than this. No nation has a history so thoroughly digested; and on the whole it is trustworthy. In preparing this volume, my necessities have been confined mostly to the Works of Sze-mâ Ch'ien, and his successor, Pan Kû (班 固), the Historian of the first Han dynasty.

歷代統記表, 'The Annals of the Nation.' Published by imperial authority in 1803, the eighth year of Ch'ià-ch'ing. This Work is invaluable to a student, being, indeed, a collection of chronological tables, where every year, from the rise of the Châu dynasty, B.C. 1121, has a distinct column to itself, in which, in different compartments, the most important events are noted. Beyond that date, it ascends to nearly the commencement of the cycles in the sixty-first year of Hwang-tî, giving—not every year, but the years of which anything has been mentioned in history. From Hwang-tî also, it ascends through the dateless ages up to Pan-kû, the first of mortal sovereigns.

歷代疆域表, 'The Boundaries of the Nation in the successive Dynasties.' This Work by the same author, and published in 1817, does for the boundaries of the empire the same service which the preceding renders to its chronology.

歷代沿革表, 'The Topography of the Nation in the successive Dynasties.' Another Work by the same author, and of the same date as the preceding.

The Dictionaries chiefly consulted have been:-

The well-known Shwo Wan (說文解字), by Hsu Shan, styled Shu-chung (許慎,字叔重), published in A.D. 100; with the supplement (繫傳) by Hsu Ch'ieh (徐鍇), of the southern Tang dynasty. The characters are arranged in the Shwo Wan under 540 keys or radicals, as they are unfortunately termed.

The Liû Shû Kû (六書故), by Tâi Tung, styled Chung-tâ (戴侗,字仲達), of our thirteenth century. The characters are arranged in it, somewhat after the fashion of the R Yâ (p. 2), under six general divisions, which again are subdivided, according to the affinity of subjects, into various categories.

The Tsze Hûi (字葉), which appeared in the Wan-li (萬歷) reign of the Ming dynasty (1573-1619). The 540 radicals of the Shwo Wan were reduced in this to 214, at which number they have since continued.

The K'ang-hsi Tsze Tien (康熙字典), or K'ang-hsi Dictionary, prepared by order of the great K'ang-hsi emperor in 1716. This is the most common and complete of all Chinese dictionaries for common use.

The Î Wăn Pi Lan (茲文備覽), 'A Complete Exhibition of all the Authorized Characters,' published in 1787; 'furnishing,' says Dr. Williams, 'good definitions of all the common characters, whose ancient forms are explained.'

The Pei Wan Yun Fû (佩文蘭所), generally known among foreigners as 'The K'ang-hsì Thesaurus.' It was undertaken by an imperial order, and published in 1711, being probably, as Wylie says, 'the most extensive work of a lexicographical character ever produced.' It does for the phraseology of Chinese literature all, and more than all, that the K'ang-hsì dictionary does for the individual characters. The arrangement of the characters is according to their tones and final sounds. My copy of it, with a supplement published about ten years later, is in forty-five large volumes, with much more letter-press in it than the edition of the Dynastic Histories mentioned on p. 133.

The Ching Tsî Tswan Kû, ping Pû Wei (經籍製品并補遺),
'A Digest of the Meanings in the Classical and other Books, with Supplement,' by, or rather under the superintendence of, Yüan Yüan (p. 132). This has often been found useful. It is arranged according to the tones and rhymes like the characters in the Thesaurus.

Dialogues: that is, the discourses or discussions of Confucius with his disciples and others on various topics, and his replies to their inquiries. Many chapters, however, and one whole book, are the sayings, not of the sage himself, but of some of his disciples. The characters may also be rendered 'Digested Conversations,' and this appears to be the more ancient signification attached to them, the account being that, after the death of Confucius, his disciples collected together and compared the memoranda of his conversations which they had severally preserved, digesting them into the twenty books which compose the work. Hence the title-Discussed Sayings,' or 'Digested Conversations' See 論語註疏解釋

In some of the books we find a unit or account of the books we find a unity or analogy of subjects, which evidently guided the compilers in grouping the chapters together. Others seem devoid of any such principle of combination. The sixteen chapters

The word , 'learn,' rightly occupies the forefront in the studies of a nation, of which its educational system has so long been the distinction and glery.

When it follows the surname, it as our 'Sir.' when it jesses are surrament is equivalent to our 'Mr.,' or may be rendered 'the philosopher,' 'the scholar,' 'the efficer,' &c. Often, however, it is better to leave it untranslated. When it precedes the surname, it indicates that the person spoken of was the master of the writer, as 子沈子, 'my master, the philosopher & Standing single and alone, as in the text, it denotes Confucius, the philosopher, or, rather, the mastr. If we render the torm by Confucius, as all preceding translators have done, we miss the indication which it gives of the handiwork of his disciples, and the reverence which it bespeaks for him. , in the old commentators, is explained by Subsequent scholars profess, for the most part, great admiration of this explanation. It is an illustration, to my mind, of the way in which Chû Hsi and his followers are continually being wise above what is written in the classical books. 22 is the rapid and frequent motion of the wings of a bird in flying, used for 'to repeat,' 'to practise.' is the obj. of the third pers. pronoun, and its antecedent is to be found in the pregnant meaning of 學. 不亦... 平 is explained by 旹 不, 'is it not?' See 四 書 神莊輔旨. To bring out the force of 'also' in , some say thus :-- 'The occasions for pleasure are many, is this not also one?' But it is better to consider as merely redundant ; -see Wang Yin-chih's masterly Treatise on the particles, chap. iii; it forms chaps. 1208 to 1217 of the 皇清經解. 說, read yus, as always when it has the entering tone marked, stands for the What is learned becomes by practice and application one's own, and hence arises complacent pleasure in the mastering mind. 1, as distinguished from 4, (WA), in the next paragraph, is the internal, individual feeling of pleasure, and the other, its exter-nal manifestation, implying also companionship. 2. , properly 'fellow-students;' but, generally, individuals of the same class and character, like-minded. 3. 君一 - I translate here-'a man of complete virtue. 2. FILIAL PIETY AND PRATERNAL SUBMISSION

ARE THE POUNDATION OF ALL VIRTUOUS PRACTICE. I. Yû, named 去, and styled 子有, and - 岩, a native of 魯, was famed among the other disciples of Confucius for his strong memory, and love for the doctrines of antiquity. In something about him he recembled the sage. See Mencius, III. Pt. I. iv. 13. 7 is 'Yû, the philosopher,' and he and Tsang Shan are the only two of Confucius's disciples who are mentioned in this style in the Lun Yu. This has led to an opinion on the part of some, that the work was compiled by their disciples. This may not be sufficiently supported, but I have not found the paculiarity pointed out satisfactorily explained. The tablet of Yû's spirit is now in the same apartment of the sage's temples as that of the sage himself, occupying the 6th place in the eastern range of 'the wise ones.' To this position it was promoted in the 3rd year of Chien-lung of the present dynasty. A degree of activity enters into the meaning of 篇 in 為人, - 'playing the man,' 'as men, showing themselves filial,' &c. 声, here = 佛, 'to be submissive as a younger brother, is in the 4th tone. With its proper signification, it was anciently is the 3rd tone. a less intense signification here than in the last chapter. I translate-'The superior man,' for want of a better term. A, 'the root,' what is radical, is here said of filial and fraternal duties, and iff, 'ways' or 'courses,' of all that is intended by 爲 (-行)仁, below. The particles 世, 者 resume the discourse about 孝弟, and introduce some further description of them. See Premare, p. 158. Hil, in the 2nd tone, is half interrogative, an answer in the affirmative being implied. is explained here as 'the principle of love, 'the virtue of the heart.' Mencius says -仁也者人也, '仁 is man,' in accordance with which Julien translates it by himanilas. Benevolence aften comes near it, but, as has been said before of 君子, we can not give a uniform rendering of the term.

BOOK III. PÅ YIH.

CHAPTER I. Confucius said of the head of the Chi family, who had eight rows of pantomimes in his area, 'If he can bear to do this, what may he not bear to do?'

The last Book treated of the practice of government, and therein no things, according to Chinese ideas, are more important than ceremonial rites and music. With those topics, therefore, the twenty-six chapters of this Book are occupied, and 'eight rows,' the principal words in the first chapter, are adopted as its heading.

1. Confucius's indigeation at the usurpation 季氏, by contraction for OF ROYAL RITES, 李操氏; see on ILv. 氏 and 姓 are now

Originally the 氏 appears to have been used to denote the branch families of one surname. 李氏, 'The Chi family,' with special reference to its head, 'The Chi,' as we should say. Chap. III. The Master said, 'If a man be without the virtues proper to humanity, what has he to do with the rites of propriety? If a man be without the virtues proper to humanity, what has he to do with music?'

CHAP. IV. 1. Lin Fang asked what was the first thing to be attended to in ceremonies.

Confucius's remark may also be translated, 'If this be endured, what may not be endured?' For there is force in the observations of the author of the 四書異註, that this par. and the following must be assigned to the sage during the short time that he held high office in Lû.

2. Again against usurped rights. Those belonging to the three families. They assembled together, as being the descendants of duke Hwan (II. v), in one temple. To this belonged the EE in the last chapter, which is called 季氏庭, circumstances having concurred to make the Chi the chief of the three families; see 四書版 VIII. vii. For the Yung ode, see Shih-ching, IV. i. sec. ii. Ode vii. It was, properly, sung in the royal temples of the Chau dynasty, at the and, the clearing away, of the mori-Scial apparatus, and contains the lines quoted attended to. 3. 11, as opposed to

4. THE ORIGIN OF CEREMONIES SHOULD RESU-LATE THERE: --- AGAINST FORMALISM. 1. Lin Pang. styled of B, was a man of La, whose tablet is now placed first, on the west, in the outer court of the temples. He is known only by the question in this chapter. According to Chû Hai, 本 here is not 程本, 'the radical iden,' 'the essence;' but = 711, 'the beginning' (opposed to 末), 'the first thing to be

CHAP. V. The Master said, 'The rude tribes of the east and north have their princes, and are not like the States of our great land which are without them.'

CHAP. VI. The chief of the Chi family was about to sacrifice to the Tai mountain. The Master said to Zan Yû, 'Can you not save him from this?' He answered, 'I cannot.' Confucius said, 'Alas! will you say that the Tai mountain is not so discerning as Lin Fang?'

Chû Hsi explains it by 古, as in Mencius—S 其 由 , 'to cleanse and dress the fields,' and interprets as in the translation. The old commentators take the meaning—和 S, 'harmony and ease,' i. e. not being overmuch troubled.

5. THE ANARCHY OF CONFUCIUS'S TIME. The were the barbarous tribes on the east of China, and A, those on the north. See 12. It. It. xiv. The two are here used for the barbarous tribes about China generally. It is a name for China because of the multitude of its regions (13), and its greatness (14). It is a common designation of it. Chu Hai takes as a simply 1. It is an an hence the sentiment in the translation. Ho Yen's commentary is to this effect:—'The rude tribes with their princes are still not equal to China with its anarchy.' 1, read as, and 1

6. On the folly of usurped sacrifices. is said to be the name appropriate to sacrifices to mountains, but we find it applied also to sacrifices to God. The Tai mountain is the first of the 'five mountains' (五 3), which are celebrated in Chinese literature, and have always received religious honours. It was in Lû, or rather on the borders between Lû and Ch'i, about two miles north of the present department city of Tai-an (泰安), in Shantung. According to the ritual of China, sacrifice could only be offered to those mountains by the sovereign, and by the princes in whose States any of them happened to be. For the chief of the Chi family, therefore, to sacrifice to the Tai mountain was a great usurpation. in II. vii=汝, and 宫 as in II. viii=则, or we may take it as = A, 'Have you said,' &c.? 泰山-泰山之神, 'The spirit of the Tai mountain.' Lin Fang, -see chap. iv, from which the reason of this reference to him may be understood. Zan Yû, named (大). and by designation 子有, was one of the disciples of Confucius, and is now third, in the hall, on the west. He entered the service of the Chi family, and was a man of ability and resource.

CHAP. VII. The Master said, 'The student of virtue has no contentions. If it be said he cannot avoid them, shall this be in archery? But he bows complaisantly to his competitors; thus he ascends the hall, descends, and exacts the forfeit of drinking. In his contention. he is still the Chün-tsze.'

CHAP. VIII. 1. Tsze-hsiâ asked, saying, 'What is the meaning of the passage-" The pretty dimples of her artful smile! The well-defined black and white of her eye! The plain ground for the colours?"

2. The Master said, 'The business of laying on the colours follows

(the preparation of) the plain ground.

3. 'Ceremonies then are a subsequent thing?' The Master said, 'It is Shang who can bring out my meaning. Now I can begin to talk about the odes with him.

In Confucius's time there were three principal exercises of archery:—the great archery, under the eye of the sovereign; the guests' archery, which might be at the royal court or at the visits of the princes among themselves; and the festive archery, for amusement. The regulations for the archers were substantially the same in them all, and served to prove their virtue, instead of giving occasion to quarrelling. There is no end to the controversies among commentators on minor points.

But the 7, 'literary monuments' of those countries, and their 獻 (= 賢, so in the Shû-ching, V. vii. 5, et al.), wise men, had become few. Had Confucius therefore delivered all his knowledge about the two dynasties, he would have exposed his truthfulness to (a), in the sense of (b), 'to witsuspicion. ness, and, at the end, 'to appeal to for evidence.' The old commentators, however, interpret the whole differently.—Already in the time of Confucius many of the records of antiquity had perished.

18. That there is no resource against the CONSEQUENCES OF VIOLATING THE RIGHT. I. Chia was a great officer of Wei (), and having the power of the State in his hands insinuated to Confucius that it would be for his advantage to pay court to him. The M, or south-west corner, was from the structure of ancient houses the contest nook, and the place of honour. Chû Hsî explains the proverb by reference to the customs of sacrifice. The furnace was the customs of sacrifice. The furnace was comparatively a mean place, but when the found sufficient reference to such an introduction at so early a period. The ordinary explanation, and the proverb quoted was in vegue. But there does not seem much force in this explanation. The door, or well, or any other of the five things in the regular sacrifices, might take the place of the furnace. The old explanation which makes no reference to sacrifice among the poople.

But why should Heaven mean principle, if there were not in such a use of the term an instinctive recognition of a supreme go ment of intelligence and righteousnes? find 天 explained in the 四書柘餘說 by高高在上者, 'The lofty One who is on high.' 17. How Confucius cleaved to ancient rites. 1. The king in the last month of the year gave out to the princes a calendar for the first days of the months of the year ensuing. This was kept in their ancestral temples, and on the 1st of every month they offered a sheep and announced the day, requesting sanction for the duties of the month. This idea of requesting sanction is indicated by ##, read kul. The dukes of Lu now neglected their part of this ceremony, but the sheep was still offered:—a meaningless formality, it seemed to Tsze-kung. Confucius, however, thought that while any part of the ceremony was retained, there was a better chance of restoring 大, in the 3rd tone, an active verb, 'to put away.' HEADING OF THIS BOOK.—

(I) ship, we have seen, is for the aid of virtue (I. viii. 3), and the same should be the object device in a legitle in a le the title of this fourth Book, which is mostly occupied with the subject of ____. To render that term invariably by benevolence, would by no means suit many of the chapters. See II. i. s. Virtue, as a general term, would answer better. The embodiment of virtue demands an acquaintance with ceremonies and music, treated of in the last Book; and this, it is said, is the reason why the one subject immediately follows the other.

CHAP. IX. The Master said, 'A scholar, whose mind is set on truth, and who is ashamed of bad clothes and bad food, is not fit to be discoursed with.

CHAP. X. The Master said, 'The superior man, in the world,' does not set his mind either for anything, or against anything; what is right he will follow.'

CHAP. XI. The Master said, 'The superior man thinks of virtue; the small man thinks of comfort. The superior man thinks of the sanctions of law; the small man thinks of favours which he may receive.

8. The importance of knowing the right | 'truth,' which perhaps is the best translation way. One is perplexed to translate in here. Chû defines it-事物當然之理, 'the principles of what is right in events and things." Better is the explanation in 四書翼註, -道即쬭性之道,'道 is the path'. i.e. of action — which is in accordance with our nature. Man is formed for this, and if he die without coming to the knowledge of it, his death is no better than that of a beast. One would fain recognise in such sentences a vague apprehension of some higher truth than Chinese sages have been able to propound .-- Ho Yen takes a different view, and makes the whole chapter a lament of Confucius that he was likely to die without hearing of right principles prevailing in the world.—'Could I once hear of the prevalence of right principles, I could die the same evening! Other views Other views of the meaning have been proposed.

He was then over 60 years, and being convinced that he was not to see for himself the triumph of his principles, he became the more anxious about their transmission, and the training of the disciples in order to that. Such is the common view of the chapter. Some say, however, that it is not to be understood of all the disciples. Po-i and Shu-ch'l, however, are in effect their names in the mouths and writings of the Chinese. Kû-chû was a small State, included in the present department of A in Pei-chih-li. Their father left his king to Shu-ch'i, who refused to take the place of his elder brother. Po-t in turn declined the throne; so they both abandoned it, and retired into obscurity. When king Wû was taking his measures against the tyrant Chau, they made their appearance, and remonstrated against his course. Finally, they died of hunger, rather than live under the new dynasty. They were celebrated for their purity, and aversion to men whom they considered had, but Confucius here brings out their generosity. 為是用希 'Recentments thereby

In China the sovereign sits facing the south. So did the princes of the States in their several courts in Confucius's time. An explanation of the practice is attempted in the Yiching, 設事, chap. ix, 離也看明也, 人南面而聽天下,向明 而治蓋取此也, 'The diagram Li have the mind imbued with it. 磁=敬 conveys the idea of brightness, when all things as in I. v.

CHAP. IX. The Master said, 'Admirable indeed was the virtue of Hûi! With a single bamboo dish of rice, a single gourd dish of drink, and living in his mean narrow lane, while others could not have endured the distress, he did not allow his joy to be affected by it. Admirable indeed was the virtue of Hûi!'

CHAP. X. Yen Ch'iû said, 'It is not that I do not delight in your doctrines, but my strength is insufficient.' The Master said, 'Those whose strength is insufficient give over in the middle of the way, but now you limit yourself.'

8. LARRET OF CONFUCIUS OVER THE MORTAL SECENCES OF PO-BIO. Po-niù, 'elder or uncle Niù,' was the denomination of Hard, one of the disciples of the sage. Suffering from such a disease, Po-niù would not see people, and Confucius took his hand through the window. A different explanation is given by Chù Hsi. He says that sick persons were usually placed on the north side of the spartment; but when the prince visited them, in order that he might appear to them with his face to the south (see chap. i), they were moved to the south. On this occasion, Po-niù's friends wanted to receive Confucius after this royal

CHAP. XIII. The Master said, Mang Chih-fan does not boast of his merit. Being in the rear on an occasion of flight, when they were about to enter the gate, he whipped up his horse, saying, "It is not that I dare to be last. My horse would not advance."

11. How learning should be fursued. 有 Mich-ming's becoming eminent. He travelled fourthwards with not a few followers, and places near Sû-châu and elsewhere retain names in-信. We should hardly have judged such a counsel sary for Taze-haia.

12. THE CHARACTER OF TAN-T'AL MINE-MING. The chapter shows, according to Chinese comentators, the advantage to people in authority of their having good men about them. In this way after their usual fashion, they seek for a profound meaning in the remark of Confucius. Tan-t'ai Mich-ming, who was styled has his tablet the 2nd, east, outside the hall. fan, named 181, was an officer of Lt. The The accounts of him are conflicting. 13. THE VINCUE OF MANG CHIM-PAR IN COM-GRALING HIS MERIT. But where was his virtue in deviating from the truth? And how could Confucius commend him for doing so? These questions have never troubled the commentators, nor is it wise to bring a railing accusation against the eags for his words here. Mang Chihdefeat referred to was in the eleventh year of duke Ai. To lead the van of an army is called By, to bring up the rear is Ry. In retreat,

Tan was Chau-kung, in wisdom and politics, what his elder brother, the first sovereign, Wû, was in arms. Confucius had longed to bring the principles and institu-

The ceremonies were ranged in five classes: lucky or sacrifices; unlucky or those of mourning; military; those of host and guest; and factive Music required the study of the music of Hwang-ti, of Yao, of Shun, of Yü, of Tang and of Wu. Archery had a fivefold classification. Charioteering had the same. The study of the characters required the examination of them to determine whether there predominated in their formation resemblance to the object, combination of ideas, indication of properties, a phonetic principle, a principle of contrariety, or metaphorical accommodation. Figures were managed according to nine rules, as the object had longed to bring the principles and institu-tions of Chau-kung into practice, and in his earlier years, while hope animated him, had highest and most liberal education, but we often dreamt of the former sage. "' By unrighteousness I might get riches and honours, but such riches and honours are to me as a floating cl~ud. It is vain to grasp at them, so uncertain and unsubstantial.'

16. THE VALUE WHICH CONFUCIUS ART UPON THE STUDY OF THE Y1. Chû Hai supposes that this was spoken when Confucius was about seventy as he was in his sixty-eighth year when he ceased his wanderings, and settled in Lû to the adjust-ment and compilation of the Yi and other Ching. If the remark be referred to that time, an error may well be found in I -, for he would hardly be speaking at seventy of having fifty years added to his life. Chu also mentions the report of Liu Ping-chun, referred to by him under V. xxiv, that he had been told of a copy of the Lun Yu, which read 假 for 加, and 平 for 至.

15. THE JOY OF CONFUCIUS INDEPENDENT OF Amended thus, the meaning would be-'If I had some more years to finish the study of the YI, &c.' Ho Yen interprets the chapter quite differently. Referring to the saying, II. iv. 4. At fifty, I knew the decrees of Heaven, he supposes this to have been spoken when Confucius was forty-seven, and explains—'In a few years more I will be fifty, and have finished the Yi, when I may be without great faults. One thing remains upon both views:—Confucius never claimed, what his followers do for him, to be a perfect man.

17. Confucius's most common topics. Chû Hsî explains III (3rd tone) by 'II, 'constantly.' The old interpreter Chang explains it by 1 , 'correctly,'-'Confucius would speak of the Odes, &c., with attention to the correct enunciation of the characters.' This does not seem so good.

CHAP. XVIII. 1. The duke of Sheh asked Tsze-lû about Confucius, and Tsze-lû did not answer him.

2. The Master said, 'Why did you not say to him,—He is simply a man, who in his eager pursuit (of knowledge) forgets his food, who in the joy of its attainment forgets his sorrows, and who does not perceive that old age is coming on?'

CHAP. XIX. The Master said, 'I am not one who was born in the possession of knowledge; I am one who is fond of antiquity, and earnest in seeking it there.'

CHAP. XX. The subjects on which the Master did not talk, were—extraordinary things, feats of strength, disorder, and spiritual beings.

18. Confucius's description of his own character, as being simply a cheerful, earnest learner. I. (read sheh) was a district of Ch'û (), the governor or prefect of which was styled kung, after the usurping fashion of Ch'û. Its name is still preserved in a district of the department of , in the south of Ho-nan. 2. sometimes finishes a sentence (Prémare, 'claudit orationem'), as here. The after it = I, imparting to all the preceding description a meaning indicated by our simply or only. Wang Yin-chih, in his treatise on the particles, gives instances of I and again final.

19. COMPUCIUS'S ENOWLEDGE NOT COMMATE, BUT THE RESULT OF HIS STUDY OF ANTIQUITY. Here again, according to the commentators, is a wonderful instance of the asges humility disclaiming what he really had. The comment spiritual beings.' For an instance of Confucius of a Mr. Yin, subjoined to Chû Hai's own, is to the effect that the knowledge born with a man is only and p, while ceremonies, music, names of things, history, &c., must be learned. This would make what we may call connate or innate knowledge the moral sense, and those intuitive principles of reason, on and by which all knowledge is built up. But Confucius could not mean to deny his being possessed of these. 'I love antiquity;' i.e. the ancients and all their works.

20. SUBJECTS AVOIDED BY CONFUCIUS IN HIS CON-VERRATION.

'confusion,' meaning rebellious disorder, particide, regicide, and such crimes. Chû Hat makes here = 見神 造化之迹, 'the mysterious, or spiritual operations apparent in the course of nature.' 王蘭 (died a.D. 266), as given by Ho Yen, simply says—鬼神之事, 'the affairs of spiritual beings.' For an instance of Confucius avoiding such a subject, see XI. xi. 三子旦三人行必有我 師焉擇其善者而改之。 其不善者而改之。 三子旦天生德於子桓 三子以我為 三子四不與二三子以我為 三子以四教文行忠信。 三子以四教文行忠信。

CHAP. XXIII. The Master said, 'Do you think, my disciples, that I have any concealments? I conceal nothing from you. There is nothing which I do that is not shown to you, my disciples;—that is my way.'

CHAP. XXIV. There were four things which the Master taught,- letters, ethics, devotion of soul, and truthfulness.

21. How a man may find instructors for himself. — \(\frac{1}{17} \), 'three men walking;' but it is implied that the speaker is himself one of them. The commentators all take in the sense of 'to distinguish,' 'to determine.'—'I will determine the one who is good, and follow him, &c.' I prefer to understand as in the translation. \(\frac{1}{12} \), 'change them,' i.e. correct them in myself, avoid them.

22. COMPUTIUS CALM IN DANGER, THEOUGH THE ASSURANCE OF HAVISG A DIVINE MISSION. According to the historical accounts, Confucius was passing through Sung in his way from Wei to Ch'an, and was practising ceremonies with his disciples under a large tree, when they were set upon by emissaries of Hwan (or Hainng) T'di, a high officer of Sung. These pulled down the tree, and wanted to kill the sage. His disciples urged him to make haste and escape, when he calmed their fears by these words. At the same time, he disguised himself till he had got past Sung. This story may be apocryphal, but the saying remains,—a remarkable one.

With all his knowledge of proprieties, the duke Chao had violated an important rule,—that which forbids the intermarriage of parties of the same surname. There is as great difficulty to find out a declining of the kingdom in Tai-po's withdrawing from the petty State of Chau. may be added that king Wû, the first sovereign of the Chau dynasty, subsequently conferred on Taipo the posthumous title of Chief of Wû (吳), the country to which he had withdrawn, and whose rude inhabitants gathered round him. Of the ten ministers, the most distinguished of course was the duke of Chau. One of them, it is said next paragraph, was a woman, but whether she was the mother of king Wan, or his wife, is much disputed. The ten men were :- the duke of Chau, the duke of Shao, Grandfather Hope, the duke of Pi, the duke of Yung, Tai-ti Hung-yao, San-I Shang, Nan-kung Kwo, and the wife or mother of king Wan. 3. Instead of the usual 'The Master said,' we have here words of king Wû having been quoted immediately before, it would not have been right to crown the sage with his usual title of the Master. The style of the whole chapter, however, is different from that of any previous one, and we may suspect that it is corrupt. 才難 is a sort of proverb, or common saying, which Confucius quotes and illustrates. 莫之際 (Yao is called Tang, having seconded the throne from the marquisate of that name, and Yu became a sort of accepted surname or style of Shun) 於斯爲盛 is understood by Chû Hsl as in the translation, while the old writers take exactly the opposite 4. 2. Amusement of Confucius at the remark of AN IGNORANT MAN ABOUT HIM. Commentators, old and new, say that the chapter shows the exceeding humility of the sage, educed by his being praised, but his observation on the man's remark was evidently ironical. 1. For want of another word, I render "by 'village.' According to the statutes of Chau, 'five families made a 🔣 , four 🏚 a 📋 , and five 🛍 or 500 families a tang.' 2. 'The rules of ceremony prescribe the bowing below the hall, but now the practice is to bow only after ascending it. That is arrogant. I continue to bow below the hall, though I oppose the common practice.

CHAP. IV. There were four things from which the Master was entirely free. He had no foregone conclusions, no arbitrary predeterminations, no obstinacy, and no egoism.

1. The Master was put in fear in K'wang.

2. He said, 'After the death of king Wan, was not the cause of truth lodged here in me?

OTHERS NOT. 1. The cap here spoken of was that prescribed to be worn in the ancestral temple, and made of very fine linen dyed of a deep dark colour. It had fallen into disuse, and was superseded by a simpler one of silk. Rather than be singular, Confucius gave in to a practice, which involved no principle of right, and was economical. 2. Chû Hsi explains the 拜下, 拜乎上, thus: 'In the ceremonial intercourse between ministers and their prince, it was proper for them to bow below the raised hall. This the prince declined, on which they ascended and completed the homage.' See this illustrated in the 經註集證, is loc.
The prevailing disregard of the first part of the ceremony Confucius considered inconsistent with the proper distance to be observed between prince and minister, and therefore he would be singular in adhering to the rule.

3. Some common practices indifferent and it was not by any effort, as and III more naturally suggest, that Confucius attained to these things.

5. Confucius assured in a time of danger BY HIS CONVICTION OF A DIVINE MIMION. Compare VII. xxii, but the adventure to which this chapter refers is placed in the sage's history before the other, not long after he had resigned office, and left Lû. r. There are different opinions as to what State K'wang belonged to. The most likely is that it was a border town of Chang, and its site is now to be found in the department of K'ai-fang in Ho-nan. It is said that K'wang had suffered from 🙀 💢 , an efficer of Lu, to whom Confucius bore a resemblance. As he passed by the place, moreover, a disciple, Man, who had been associated with Yang Hu in his measures against Kwang, was driving him. BOOK X. HEANG TANG.

CHAPTER I. 1. Confucius, in his village, looked simple and sincere, and as if he were not able to speak.

· 2. When he was in the prince's ancestorial temple, or in the court, he spoke minutely on every point, but cautiously.

.. CHAP. II. 1. When he was waiting at court, in speaking with the great officers of the lower grade, he spake freely, but in a straightforward manner; in speaking with those of the higher grade, he did so blandly, but precisely.

2. When the ruler was present, his manner displayed respectful

HEADING OF THIS BOOK.—郭章章中, According to the dictionary, quoting from a 'The village, No. 10.' This Book is different in record of 'the former Han dynasty, the 多 its character from all the others in the work. It contains hardly any sayings of Confucius, but is descriptive of his ways and demeanour in a variety of places and circumstances. It is not uninteresting, but, as a whole, it hardly heightens our veneration for the sage. seem to know him better from it, and perhaps to Western minds, after being viewed in his bedchamber, his undress, and at his meals, he becomes divested of a good deal of his dignity and reputation. There is something remarkable about the style. Only in one passage is its subject styled -, 'The Master.' He appears either as . 'The philosopher K'ung,' or .as 君子, 'The superior man.' A suspicion is thus raised that the chronicler had not the same relation to him as the compilers of the other Books. Anciently, the Book formed only one chapter, but it is now arranged under seventeen divisions. Those divisions, for convenience in the translation, I continue to denominate chapters, which is done also in some native editions.

1. DEMRANOUR OF CONFUCTUS IN HIS VILLAGE, r. applicable to all the higher officers in a IN THE ANCESTRAL TEMPLE, AND IN THE COURT.

record of 'the former Han dynasty, the contained 2,500 families, and the 🚉 only 500; but the two terms are to be taken here together, indicating the residence of the sage's relatives. His native place in Lu is doubtless intended, rather than the original seat of his family in Sung. 怕怕如 is explained by Wang Sû 'mild-like,' and by Chû Hsi, as in the translation, thinking probably that, with that meaning, it suited the next clause better. 2. 便, read p'ien, the 2nd tone=辩, 'to debate,' 'to discriminate accurately.' In those two places of high ceremony and of government, it became the sage, it is said, to be precise and particular. Compare III. xv. 2. DEMEANOUR OF CONFUCIUS AT COURT WITH OTHER GREAT OFFICERS, AND BEFORE THE PRINCE. I. may be taken here as a verb, literally = 'courting.' 3. DEMEANOUR OF CONFUCIUS AT THE OFFICIAL RECEPTION OF A VISITOR. 1. The visitor is supposed to be the ruler of another State. On the occasion of two princes meeting there was much ceremony. The visitor having arrived, he remained outside the front gate, and the host inside his reception room, which was in the ancestral temple. Messages passed between them by means of a number of officers called , on the side of the visitor, and [7], on the side of the host, who formed a zigzag line of communication from the one to the other, and passed their questions and answers along, till meaning which I have given in the translation.

The host having come out to receive his visitor, proceeded in with him, it is said, followed by all their internuncios in a line, and to his manner in this movement this paragraph is generally referred. But the duty of seeing the guest off, the subject of next paragraph, belonged to the shang pin, and could not be performed by Confucius as merely a ch ang pin. Hence arises a difficulty. Either it is true that Confucius was at one time raised to the rank of the highest dignitaries of the State, or he was temporarily employed, from his knowledge of ceremonies, after the first act in the reception of visitors, to discharge the duties of one. Assuming this, the 超進 is to be explained of some of his movements in the reception room. How could be hurry forward when walking in file with the other internuncios? See the 柘餘說, IL

The 'sacrificing' refers to a custom something like our saying grace. The master took a few grains of rice, or part of the other provisions, and placed them on the ground, among the sacrificial vessels, a tribute to the worthy or worthies who first taught the art of cooking. The Buddhist priests in their monasteries have a custom of this kind, and on public occasions, as when Ch'l-ying gave an entertainment in Hongkong in 1845, something like it is sometimes observed, but any such corremony is unknown among the common habits of the people. However poor might be his fare, Confucius always observed it. (chái) — I, the grave demeanour appropriate to fasting.

With But the 2nd paragraph is decidedly against this this Book there commences the second part of interpretation. is is not to be joined to the the Analects, commonly called the Hsia Lun There is, however, no important authority for this division. It contains as chapters, treating mostly of various disciples of the Master, and deciding the point of their worthiness. Min Tsze-ch'ien appears in it four times, and on this account some attribute the compilation of it to his disciples. There are indications in the style of a peculiar hand.

1. CONFUCIUS'S PREFERENCE OF THE SIMPLES wate of possess times 1. 先進,後進 are said by Chu Hat to-先輩,後 Literally, the expressions are, those who first advanced, those who afterwards advanced, i. e. on the stage of the world. In Ho Yen, the chapter is said to speak of the dis-succeeding 於耀樂, but 於-quad. It is supposed that the characterising the 先進 as rustics, and their successors as chin-to a style of his times, which Confucius quotes ironically. We have in it a new instance of the various application of the name chin-isse. In the 備旨, it is said, 'Of the words and actions of men in their mutual intercourse and in the business of government, whatever indicates respect is here included in ceremonies, and whatever is expressive of harmony is here included in music

2. COMPUCIUS'S RESERVED MEMORY OF HIS DES-DISCIPLES. I. This utterance must have been trative talents, Zan Yû and Chî Lû; for their literary acquirements, Tsze-yû and Tsze-hsiâ.

CHAP. III. The Master said, 'Hûi gives me no assistance. There is nothing that I say in which he does not delight."

CHAP. IV. The Master said, 'Filial indeed is Min Tsze-ch'ien! Other people say nothing of him different from the report of his parents and brothers.'

CHAP. V. Nan Yung was frequently repeating the lines about a white sceptre-stone. Confucius gave him the daughter of his elder brother to wife.

In his 62nd year or thereabouts, as the accounts o, he was passing, in his wanderings from Ch'an to Ts'ai, when the officers of Ch'an, afraid that he would go on into Ch'û, endeavoured to stop his course, and for several days he and the disciples with him were cut off from food. Both Chan and Ts'ai were in the present province of Ho-nan, and are referred to the departments of 陳州 and 汝氧. 2. This paragraph is to be taken as a note by the compilers of the Book, enumerating the principal followers of Confucius on the occasion referred to, with their distinguishing qualities. They are arranged in four classes (四季), and, amounting to ten, are known as the The 'four classes' and 'ten wise ones' are often mentioned in connexion with the sage's school. The ten disciples have all appeared in the previous Books.

8. HOI'S SILEST RECEPTION OF THE MASTER'S TRACEINGS. A teacher is sometimes helped by the doubts and questions of learners, which lead him to explain himself more fully. Com-K'ung An-kwe takes it in its usual pronunciation = ##, 'to explain.'

4. THE FILIAL PIETY OF MIN TSZE-CH'IES. , as in VIII. xxi, 'could pick out no crevice or flaw in the words, &c.' 陳 羞 (about A. D. 200-250), as given in Ho Yen, explains-'Men had no words of disparagement for his conduct in reference to his parents and brothers.' This is the only instance where Confucius calls a disciple by his designation. The use of 子素 is supposed, in the 合蕭, to be a mistake of the compilers. 'Brothers' includes cousins, indeed = kindred.

5. Confucius's approbation of Nan Yung. Nan Yung, see V. i. ____, as in V. xix. I have translated it by 'frequently;' but, in the 'Family Sayings,' it is related that Yung repeated the lines thrice in one day. see the Shih-ching, III. iii. Ode 11.5. The lines there are-'A flaw in a white sceptre-stone may be ground away; but for a flaw in speech, nothing can be done. CHAP. VI. Chi K'ang asked which of the disciples loved to learn. Confucius replied to him, 'There was Yen Hûi; he loved to learn. Unfortunately his appointed time was short, and he died. Now there is no one who loves to learn, as he did.

CHAP. VII. 1. When Yen Yuan died, Yen Lû begged the carriage of the Master to sell and get an outer shell for his son's coffin.

2. The Master said, 'Every one calls his son his son, whether he has talents or has not talents. There was Li; when he died, he had a coffin but no outer shell. I would not walk on foot to get a shell for him, because, having followed in the rear of the great officers, it was not proper that I should walk on foot.'

When Yen Yuan died, the Master said, 'Alas! CHAP. VIII. Heaven is destroying me! Heaven is destroying me!

6. How Hor Loved to LEARN. See VI. ii, active verb followed by a double objective. In where the same question is put by the duke burying, they used a coffin, called , and an Ai, and the same answer is returned, only in a more extended form.

7. How Confucius would not sall his car-RIAGE TO BUY A SHELL FOR YEN YÜAN. 1. There is a chronological difficulty here. Hûi, according to the 'Family Sayings,' and the 'Historical Records,' must have died several years before Confucius's son, Li. Either the dates in them are incorrect, or this chapter is spurious.—Yen Lû, the father of Hûi, had himself been a disciple of the sage in former years. 為之槨 (i. q. char. in text),—this is the idiom noticed simply the exclamation of bitter sorrow. fucius, retired from office, might still present himself at court, in the robes of his former dignity, and would still be consulted on emergencies. He would no doubt have a foremost place on such occasions.

10. Confucius's dissatisfaction with grand way in wrich Hûi was buried. 1. The old interpreters take | | As being the disciples of Yen Yuan. This is not natural, and yet we can hardly understand how the disciples

This passage, indeed, is cited in the dictionary, in illustration of that use of the term. 子, see III. xxiv.

The older ones say -' Confucius put off Chi Lû, and gave him no answer, because spirits and death are obscure and unprofitable subjects to talk about.' With this some modern writers agree, as the author of the 翼註; but others, and the majority, say-'Confucius answered the disciple profoundly, and showed him how he should prosecute his inquiries in the proper order. The service of the dead must be in the same spirit as the service of the living. Obedience and sacrifice are equally the expression of the filial heart. Death is only the natural termination of life. We are born with certain gifts and principles, which carry us on to the end of our course. This is ingenious refining, but, after all, Confucius avoids answering the important questions proposed to him.

所 is 'a treasury,' as distinguished from 倉, called 'the scholar's lute.' 'a granary,' and from III, 'an arsenal.' 'The Long Treasury' was the name of the one in question. We must, however, say that the Master only required the disciples here to tell Ch'iû of his faults and recover him.

17. CHARACTERS OF THE FOUR DISCIPLES CH'AI, SHAN, SHIH, AND YO. It is supposed a is missing from the beginning of this chapter. Admitting this, the sentences are to be translated in the present tense, and not in the past, which would be required if the chapter were simply the record of the compilers. Ch'ai, by surname 高, and styled 子羔 (of there are several diases), has his tablet now the 5th west, in the outer court of the temples. He was small and ugly, but distinguished for his sincerity, filial piety, and justice. Such was the conviction of his impartial justice, that in a time of peril he was saved by a man, whom he had formerly punished with cutting off his feet. All the other names have already occurred and been explained. 3. The Master said, 'If, because a man's discourse appears solid and sincere, we allow him to be a good man, is he really a superior man? or is his gravity only in appearance?

CHAP. XXI. Tsze-lû asked whether he should immediately carry into practice what he heard. The Master said, 'There are your father and elder brothers to be consulted; -- why should you act on that principle of immediately carrying into practice what you hear?' Zan Yû asked the same, whether he should immediately carry into practice what he heard, and the Master answered, 'Immediately carry into practice what you hear.' Kung-hsi Hwa said, 'Yû asked whether he should carry immediately into practice what he heard, and you said, "There are your father and elder brothers to be consulted." Ch'in asked whether he should immediately carry into practice what he heard, and you said, "Carry it immediately into practice." I, Ch'ih, am perplexed, and venture to ask you for an explanation.' The commentators, however, expand it thus:—'I knew that you would not perish in this danger, and therefore I would not rashly expose my own life, but preserved it rather, that I might continue to enjoy the benefit of your instructions.' If we inquire how Hūi knew that Confucius would not perish, we are informed that he shared his master's assurance that he had a divine mission.—See VII. xxii, 1X. v.

Yen Yuan then said, 'Though I am deficient in intelligence and vigour, I will make it my business to practise this lesson.

Headine of this Book. - 顯淵第十月而存,故謂私爲已, 已 here Yuan." It contains 24 chapters, conveying lessons on perfect virtue, government, and other questions of morality and policy, addressed in conversation by Confucius chiefly to his disciples. The different answers, given about the same subject to different questioners, show well how the sage suited his instructions to the characters and capacities of the parties with whom he had to do.

1. How to attain to perfect virtue:—A COMPERSATION WITH YEN YUAN. 1. In Ho Yen, 克已 is explained by 約身, 'to restrain the body.' Cht Hat defines 克 by 勝, 'to 耳, 目, 口, 鼻之欲, 'the desires of the overcome,' and 已 by 身之私欲, 'the dominating influences of the senses;' and third, selfish desires of the body.' In the 合譯, it is mid-已非即是私,但私即附 riority. More concisely, the 已 is mid, in the

, 'The twelfth Book, beginning with "Yen is not exactly selfishness, but selfishness is what abides by being attached to the body, and hence it is said that selfishness is F. . And *gain, 克己非克去其已, 乃克 去已中之私欲也 克已 is not subduing and putting away the self, but subduing and putting away the selfish desires in the self.' This 'selfishness in the self' is of a threefold character :--first, 氣 票, said by Morrison to be 'a person's natural constitution and disposition of mind: ' it is, I think, very much the ψυχικός άνθρωπος or 'animal man;' second, 電我, 'Thou and I,' i. e. the lust of supe-

CHAP. II. Chung-kung asked about perfect virtue. The Master said, 'It is, when you go abroad, to behave to every one as if you were receiving a great guest; to employ the people as if you were assisting at a great sacrifice; not to do to others as you would not wish done to yourself; to have no murmuring against you in the country, and none in the family.' Chung-kung said, 'Though I am deficient in intelligence and vigour, I will make it my business to practise this lesson.

2. The Master said, 'The man of perfect virtue is cautious and slow in his speech.'

翼註, to be the 人心 as opposed to the that every man may attain to this virtue for 道心, 'the mind of man' in opposition to 'the mind of reason;'—see the Shû-ching, II. ii.

This refractory 'mind of man,' it is said, 與生俱生, 'is innate,' or, perhaps, 'con-In all these statements there is an nate. acknowledgment of the fact—the morally abnormal condition of human nature-which underlies the Christian doctrine of original sin. With reference to the above threefold classification of selfish desires, the second paragraph shows that it was the second order of themthe influence of the senses—which Confucius specially intended. 復元,—see note on 形。 VIII. ii. It is not here ceremonies. Chû Hsî defines it—天理之節文, 'the specific divisions and graces of heavenly principle or reason.' This is continually being departed from, on the impulse of selfishness, but there is an ideal of it as proper to man, which is to be sought-'returned to'-by overcoming that. is explained by Chû Hai by 🔟, 'to allow.' The gloss of the 雷旨 is—稱其仁, 'will praise his perfect virtue. Perhaps T is only = our 'everybody,' or 'anybody.' Some editors take hose in the sense or 'vo resum, 'the empire will return to perfect virtue;'supposing the exemplifier to be a prince.

himself, is equivalent to our 'or,' and implies a strong denial of what is asked. 2. 其refers to 克已復禮 目-條件, 'a list of particulars.' 🔟 is used as an active verb;—'I beg to make my business these words.'
2. Wherein prefect virtue is realized:—A CONVERSATION WITH CHUNG-KUNG. Chung-kung, see VI. i. From this chapter it appears that reverence (故) and reciprocity (如), on the largest scale, constitute perfect virtue. E,- ordering the people, is apt to be done with haughtiness. This part of the answer may be compared with the apostle's precept 'Honour all men,' only the 'all men' is much more comprehensive there. 己所太太, -compare V. xi. 在邦, 在家,='abroad,' at home.' Pão Hsien, in Ho Yen, however, takes the former as denoting 'the prince of a State, and the latter, the chief of a great officer's establishment. This is like the interpretation of in last chapter.—The answer, the same as that of Hûi in last chapter, seems to betray the hand of the compiler.

Master said, 'The superior man has neither anxiety nor fear.'

2. 'Being without anxiety or fear!' said Niû;—'does this constitute what we call the superior man?'

3. The Master said, 'When internal examination discovers nothing wrong, what is there to be anxious about, what is there to fear?'

1. Sze-må Niû, full of anxiety, said, 'Other men all have their brothers, I only have not.

5. Consolation offered by Tsze-hslâ to Tsze-NIÛ, ANXIOUS ABOUT THE WAYS OF HIS BROTHER. I. Tsze-niù's anxiety was occasioned by the conduct of his eldest brother Hwan Tûi, who, office of 'Master of the horse' () had he knew, was contemplating rebellion, which would probably lead to his death. 'elder brothers' and 'younger brothers,' but Tsze-niû was himself the youngest of his family. The phrase simply = 'brothers.' CHAP. VI. Tsze-chang asked what constituted intelligence. The Master said, 'He with whom neither slander that gradually soaks into the mind, nor statements that startle like a wound in the flesh, are successful, may be called intelligent indeed. Yea, he with whom neither soaking slander, nor startling statements, are successful, may be called far-seeing.

I it is said, was always seeking to be wise about have found no satisfactory gloss on the phrase -'the four seas.' It is found in the Shu-ching, the Shih-ching, and the Li Chi. In the a sort of Lexicon, very ancient, which was once reckoned among the Ching, it is explained as a territorial designation, the name of the dwelling-place of all the barbarous tribes. But the great Yu is represented as having made the four seas as four ditches, to which he drained the waters inundating 'the Middle Kingdom.' Plainly, the ancient conception was of their own country as the great habitable tract, north, south, east, and west of which were four seas or oceans, between whose shores and their own borders the intervening space was not very great, and occupied by wild hordes of inferior races. See the 四書釋地續, II. xxiv.—Commentators consider Taze-haia's attempt at consolation altogether wide of the mark.

1. Tsze-kung asked about government. ter said, 'The requisites of government are that there be sufficiency of food, sufficiency of military equipment, and the confidence of the people in their ruler.

2. Tsze-kung said, 'If it cannot be helped, and one of these must be dispensed with, which of the three should be foregone first?'

'The military equipment,' said the Master.

3. Tsze-kung again asked, 'If it cannot be helped, and one of the remaining two must be dispensed with, which of them should be foregone?' The Master answered, 'Part with the food. From of old, death has been the lot of all men; but if the people have no faith in their rulers, there is no standing for the State.

CHAP. VIII. 1. Chi Tsze-ch'ang said, 'In a superior man it is only the substantial qualities which are wanted; ---why should we seek for ornamental accomplishments?'

7. REQUISITES IN GOVERNMENT:—A CONVERSATION WITH TSZE-KUNG. I. Frimarily means 'Weapons.' 'A soldier,' the bearer of such weapons. 'A soldier,' the bearer of such weapons is a secondary meaning. There were weapons, is a secondary meaning. There were no standing armies in Confucius's time. The term is to be taken here, as = 'military equipment, 'preparation for war.' 信之,一之 refers to II , 'their ruler.' 3. The difficulty here is with the concluding claus. 信不立. Transferring the meaning of 信 from paragraph 1, we naturally render as in the translation, and X 11 = 3 X 11, 'the State will not stand.' This is the view, moreover, of the old interpreters. Chû Hsî and his followers, however, seek to make much more of 信. On the 1st paragraph he comments, without 信, though they live, they have not wherewith to establish themselves. It is better for them in such case to die. Therefore it is better for the ruler to die, not losing faith to his people, so that the people will prefer death rather than lose faith to him.

8, Substantial qualities and accomplishments in the Chün-tsze. 1. Tsze-ch'ang was an officer of the State of Wei, and, distressed by the pursuit in the times of what was merely external, made this not sufficiently well-considered remark, to which Tsze-kung replied in, according to Chû Hsī, an equally one-sided manner. 1. 何以文爲 is thus expanded in the 註疏,一何用文章乃爲君 -'The granaries being full, and the military preparation complete, then let the influence of instruction proceed. So shall the people have make a Chile-tee?' 2. We may interpret this

2. Tsze-kung said, 'Alas! Your words, sir, show you to be a superior man, but four horses cannot overtake the tongue.

3. 'Ornament is as substance; substance is as ornament. The hide of a tiger or leopard stripped of its hair, is like the hide of a dog or goat stripped of its hair.'

CHAP. IX. I. The duke Ai inquired of Yû Zo, saying, 'The year is one of scarcity, and the returns for expenditure are not sufficient;—what is to be done?'

2. Yû Zo replied to him, 'Why not simply tithe the people?'

3. 'With two-tenths,' said the duke, 'I find them not enough;—how could I do with that system of one-tenth?'

4. Yû Zo answered, 'If the people have plenty, their prince will not be left to want alone. If the people are in want, their prince cannot enjoy plenty alone.'

paragraph, as in the translation, putting a comma after . So, Chû Hsi. But the old interpreters seem to have read right on, without any comma, to . , in which case the paragraph would be—'Alas! sir, for the way in which you speak of the superior man!' And this is the most natural construction. 3. The modern commentators seem hypercritical in condemning Tsze-kung's language here. He shows the desirableness of the ornamental accomplishments, but does not necessarily put them on the same level with the substantial qualities.

9. LIGHT TAXATION THE BEST WAY TO SECURE ON the duke that a sympathy and common of the government from emergency for want of functions of the Châu dynasty, the ground was divided into allotments cultivated in common by the families located upon them, and the produce was divided equally, nine-paragraph, as in the translation, putting a tenths being given to the farmers, and one-tenth being reserved as a contribution to the State.

Interpreters seem to have read right on, withparently, to the system of common labour. 3. A former duke of Lû, Hsûan (a. c. 609-591), had imposed an additional tax of another tenth from each family's portion. 4. The meaning of this paragraph is given in the translation. Literally rendered, it is,—"The people having plenty, the prince—with whom not plenty? The people not having plenty, with whom can the prince have plenty?" Yû Zo wished to impress on the duke that a sympathy and common condition should unite him and his people. If he lightened his taxation to the regular tithe, then they would cultivate their allotments with so much vigour, that his receipts would be abundant. They would be able, moreover, to help their kind ruler in any emergency.

1. Tsze-chang having asked how virtue was to be exalted, and delusions to be discovered, the Master said, 'Hold faithfulness and sincerity as first principles, and be moving continually to what is right;—this is the way to exalt one's virtue.

2. You love a man and wish him to live; you hate him and wish him to die. Having wished him to live, you also wish him to die.

This is a case of delusion.

3. "It may not be on account of her being rich, yet you come to make a difference."

CHAP. XI. 1. The duke Ching, of Ch'î, asked Confucius about government.

- 2. Confucius replied, 'There is government, when the prince is prince, and the minister is minister; when the father is father, and the son is son.
- 3. 'Good!' said the duke; 'if, indeed; the prince be not prince, the minister not minister, the father not father, and the son not son, although I have my revenue, can I enjoy it?'

CHAP. XVIII. Chi K'ang, distressed about the number of thieves in the State, inquired of Confucius how to do away with them. fucius said, 'If you, sir, were not covetous, although you should reward them to do it, they would not steal.'

CHAP. XIX. Chi K'ang asked Confucius about government, saying, 'What do you say to killing the unprincipled for the good of the principled?' Chû Hsi to the 11th year of the duke Ai of Lû, when Confucius was 69, and he returned from his wanderings to his native State. Taxelà had then been some time in the service of the duke Ch'û of Wei, who, it would appear, had been wishing to get the services of the sage himself, and the disciple did not think that his Master would refuse to accept office, as he had not objected to his doing so. 2. Now, the duke Ch'û held the rule of Wei against his father; see VII. xiv. Confucius, from the necessity of the case and peculiarity of the circumstances, allowed his disciples, notwith-standing that, to take office in Wei; but at the time of this conversation, Ch'û had been duke for nine years, and ought to have been so established that he could have taken the course of a filial son without subjecting the State to any risks. On this account, Confucius said he would begin with rectifying the name of the duke, that is, with requiring him to resign the dukedom to his father, and be what his name

CHAP. V. The Master said, 'Though a man may be able to recite the three hundred odes, yet if, when intrusted with a governmental charge, he knows not how to act, or if, when sent to any quarter on a mission, he cannot give his replies unassisted, notwithstanding the extent of his learning, of what practical use is it?'

CHAPTER I. Hsien asked what was shameful. The Master said, 'When good government prevails in a State, to be thinking only of salary; and, when bad government prevails, to be thinking, in the same way, only of salary; -this is shameful."

HEADING OF THIS BOOK. 一素間第十四, 'Hsien asked, No. 14.' The glossarist Hsing Ping (那夏) says, 'In this Book we have the characters of the Three Kings, and Two Chiefs, the courses proper for princes and great officers, the practice of virtue, the knowledge of what is shameful, personal cultivation, and the tranquillizing of the people :—all subjects of great importance in government. They are therefore collected together, and arranged after the last Book which commences with an inquiry about government.' Somewriters are of opinion that the whole Book with its 47 chapters was compiled by Hsien or Yuan Sze, who appears in the first chapter. That only the name of the inquirer is given, and not his surname, is said to be our proof of this.

1. It is shameful in an officer to be caring ONLY ABOUT HIS ENOLUMENT. Haien is the Ydan Sze of VI. iii, and if we suppose Confucius's answer designed to have a practical application to himself, it is not easily reconcileable with what appears of his character in that other here = 10, 'emolument,' but its meaning must be pregnant and intensive, as in the translation. If we do not take it so, the sentiment is contradictory to VIII. xiii. 3. K'ung Ân-kwo, however, takes the following view of the reply: When a country is well-governed, emolument is right; when a country is ill-governed, to take office and emolument is shameful. I prefer the construction of Chû Hst, which appears in the translation.

15. CONDEMNATION OF TRANS WÛ-CHUNG FOR PORCING A PAVOUR FROM HIS PRINCE. Wû-chung (see chap. xiii) was obliged to fly from Lû, by the animosity of the Mang family, and took refuge in Chû (). As the head of the Tsang family, it devolved on him to offer the sacrifices in the ancestral temple, and he wished one of his half-brothers to be made the Head of the family, in his room, that those might not be neglected. To strengthen the application for this, which he contrived to get made, he re-turned himself to the city of Fang, which belonged to his family, and thence sent a message to the court, which was tantamount to a threat, that if the application were not granted, he would hold possession of the place. This was what Confucius condemned,—the matter which should have been left to the duke's grace. Hwan (the honorary epithet; his name was 小日) and Ch'iù had both been refugees in different States, the latter having been carried into Lû, away from the troubles and dangers of Ch'i, by the ministers, Kwan Chung and Shão Hû. On the death of the prince of Ch'i, Hwan anticipated Ch'iû, got to Ch'i, and took possession of the State. Soon after, he required the duke of Lû to put his brother to death, and to deliver up the two ministers, when Shao (A here = AB) Hû chose to dash his brains out, and die with his master, while Kwan Chung returned gladly to Ch'l, took service with Hwan, became his prime minister, and made him supreme arbiter among the various chiefs of the empire. The argument is this:-'Do you think Kwan Chung should have considered himself bound to Chiù, as a common man considers himself bound to his wife? And would you have had him commit suicide, as common people will do on any slight occasion? Commentators say that there is underlying the vindication this fact — that Kwan Chung and Shao Hû's adherence to Chiù was wrong in the first place, Chiû being the younger brother. Chung's conduct, therefore, was not to be judged as if Chiù had been the cenior. There is nothing of this, however, in Confucius's words. He vindicates Chung simply on the ground of his subsequent services, and his reference to 'the small fidelity' of husband and wife among the common people is very unhappy. In the 集證, in loc., we find a ridiculous reason given for the surnames being a hundred, to the effect that the ancient sages gave a surname for each of the five notes of the scale in music, and of the five great relations of life and of the four seas; consequently $5 \times 5 \times 4 = 100$. It is to be observed, that in the Shû we find 'a hun-It is to be dred surnames,' interchanged with 真红, 'ten thousand surnames,' and it would seem needless, therefore, to seek to attach a definite explanation to the number. 沥露,—see VL xxviii.

1. The duke Ling of Wei asked Confucius about tactics. Confucius replied, 'I have heard all about sacrificial vessels, but I have not learned military matters.' On this, he took his departure the next day.

2. When he was in Chan, their provisions were exhausted, and his followers became so ill that they were unable to rise.

3. Tsze-lû, with evident dissatisfaction, said, 'Has the superior man likewise to endure in this way?' The Master said, 'The superior man may indeed have to endure want, but the mean man, when he is in want, gives way to unbridled license.'

HEADING OF THIS BOOK.—衞襲公第 The duke Ling of Wei, No. 15. The contents of the Book, contained in forty chapters, are as miscellaneous as those of the former. Rather they are more so, some chapters bearing on the public administration of government, several being occupied with the superior man, and others containing lessons of practical wisdom. 'All the subjects,' says Hsing Ping, 'illustrate the feeling of the sense of shame and consequent pursuit of the correct course, and therefore the Book immediately follows the preceding one.

1. Confucius repuses to talk on military AFFAIRS. IN THE MIDST OF DISTRESS, HE SHOWS THE DISCIPLES HOW THE SUPERIOR MAN IS ABOVE in his preface to the Analects.) 3. iii = 'yes, arrangement of the ranks of an army,' here = tactics generally.

選豆之事, VIII. iv. 3. The 俎 was a dish, t8 inches long and 8 inches broad, on a stand 8½ inches high, upon which the flesh of victims was laid, but the meaning is sacrificial vessels generally, = the business of ceremonies. It is said of Confucius, in the 'Historical Records,' that when a boy, he was fond of playing at A and E. He wished by his reply and departure, to teach the duke that the rules of propriety, and not war, were essential to the government of a State. 2. From Wei, Confucius proceeded to Chan, and there met with the distress here mentioned. It is probably the same which is referred to in XI. ii. 1, though there is some chronological difficulty about the subject. (See the note by Chû Hsi 1. It read chim, in 4th tone, 'the indeed,' with reference to Tsze-lu's question nt of the ranks of an arms.' here superior take it in its sense of 'firm.'—The superior rior man firmly endures want.'-Duke Ling, 俎豆之事,-comp. see XIV. xx, also in Chwang-tsze, xxv. 9, et al.

2. Tsze-kung replied, 'Yes,—but perhaps it is not so?' 3. 'No,' was the answer; 'I seek a unity all-pervading.'

CHAP. III. The Master said, 'Yû, those who know virtue are few.'

CHAP. IV. The Master said, 'May not Shun be instanced as having governed efficiently without exertion? What did he do? He did nothing but gravely and reverently occupy his royal seat.'

But the design of Confucius was probably the same in them both; and I understand the first paragraph here as meaning—'Ts'ze, do you think that I am aiming, by the exercise of memory, to acquire a varied and extensive knowledge?'. Then the 3rd paragraph is equivalent to "I am a state of the valent to :- 'I am not doing this. My aim is to know myself, -the mind which embraces all knowledge, and regulates all practice.' and so he enlarges it. That virtue remote, occupying an empty place, cannot enlarge man, needs not to be said.' That writer's account of here is probably correct, and 'duty unappre-hended,' 'in an empty place,' can have no effect on any man; but this is a mere truism. Duty apprehended is constantly enlarging, elevating, and energizing multitudes, who had previously been uncognizant of it. The first clause of the chapter may be granted, but the second is not in accordance with truth. Generally, however, man may be considered as the measure of the truth in morals and metaphysics which he holds; but after all, systems of men are for the most part beneath the highest capacities of the model men, the Chin-tsze.

29. The culpability of not reforming known FAULTS. Compare I. viii. Chû Hsi's commentary appears to make the meaning somewhat different. He says:—'If one having faults can change them, he comes back to the condition of having no faults. But if he do not change them, then they go on to their completion, and will never come to be changed.'

30. THE PRUITLESSNESS OF THINKING, WITHOUT READING. So with learning; -emolument may be found in it. The superior man is anxious lest he should not get truth; he is not anxious lest poverty should come upon him.

CHAP. XXXII. I. The Master said, 'When a man's knowledge is sufficient to attain, and his virtue is not sufficient to enable him to hold, whatever he may have gained, he will lose again.

The phrase—'to move the people' is analogous to several others, such as 鼓之, 舞之, 典之, 'to drum the people,' 'to dance them,' 'to rouse them.'

83. How to know the superior man and the MEAN MAN; AND THEIR CAPACITIES. Chû Hsî says-知,我知之, the knowing here is our knowing the individuals.' The 'little matters' are ingenious but trifling arts and accomplishments, in which a really great man may sometimes be deficient, while a small man will be familiar with them. The 'knowing' is not that the parties are chun-tsze and hsido-zan, but what attainments they have, and for what they are fit. The difficulty, on this view, is with the conclusion—而可小知.—Ho Yen says:—'The way of the chun-tsze is pro-found and far-reaching. He will not let his following recalls him to the 3rd.

however, Pao Hsien says:—'A man may knowledge be small, and he may be trusted have knowledge equal to the management of with what is great. The way of the histo-cin his office ('A' H'), but if he have not is shallow and near. He will let his knowledge be small, and he may not be trusted with what is great.'

34. VIRTUE MORE TO MAN THAN WATER OR FIRE, AND NEVER HURTFUL TO HIM. 民 is here = 人, 'man,' as in VI. xx. 'man,' as in VI. xx. 民之於仁也— 'the people's relation to, or dependence on, virtue.' The case is easily conceivable of men's suffering death on account of their virtue. There have been martyrs for their loyalty and other virtues, as well as for their religious faith. Chû Hsi provides for this difference in his remarks: 'The want of fire and water is hurtful only to man's body, but to be without virtue is to loss one's mind (the higher nature), and so it is more to him than water or fire.' See on IV. viii. 35. VIRTUE PERSONAL AND OBLIGATORY OF CHAPTER I. 1. The head of the Chî family was going to attack Chwan-yü.

2. Zan Yû and Chî-lû had an interview with Confucius, and said, 'Our chief, Chi, is going to commence operations against Chwan-yü.

Hradine of this Book.-季氏第 + 5, 'The chief of the Chi, No. 16.' Throughout this Book, Confucius is spoken of as I, 'The philosopher K'ung,' and never by the designation —, or 'The Master.' Then, the style of several of the chapters (iv-xi) is not like the utterances of Confucius to which we have been accustomed. From these circumstances, one commentator, Hung Kwo (洪适), supposed that it belonged to the Books belonging to the Lû (AB) recensus. This supposition, however, is not otherwise supported.

1. Confucius exposes the presumptuous And IMPOLITIC CONDUCT OF THE CHIEF OF THE CHI Pamily in Proposing to attack a minor state, and rebukes Zah Yû and Trze-lû for areiting the DESERT. I. 季氏 and 季 孫 below,-III. i. Chwan-yū was a small territory in La, whose ruler was of the T, or 4th order of no bility. 'Now, in regard to Chwan-yu, long ago, a former king appointed its ruler to preside over the sacrifices to the eastern Mang; moreover, it is in the midst of the territory of our State; and its ruler is a minister in direct connexion with the sovereign: - What has your chief to do with attacking it?'

5. Zan Yû said, 'Our master wishes the thing; neither of us two ministers wishes it.

6. Confucius said, 'Ch'iû, there are the words of Châu Zăn,-"When he can put forth his ability, he takes his place in the ranks of office; when he finds himself unable to do so, he retires from it. How can he be used as a guide to a blind man, who does not support him when tottering, nor raise him up when fallen?"

Their existence was not from a practice like the sub-infeudation, which belonged to the feudal system of Europe. They held of the lord paramount or king, but with the restriction which has been mentioned, and with a certain subservience also to their immediate superior. Its particular position is a short period, with the Chi family, of which fixed by its proximity to Pi, and to the Mang the chief was then Chi K'ang. This brings attack and punish,' an exercise of judicial authority, which could emanate only from the affair.' 3. Confucius addresses himself only to Ch'iù, as he had been a considerable time, and hill. W is not merely 'to attack,' but 'to

We may suppose, however, that Tsze-lû, returning with the sage from Wei on the invitation of duke Ai, took service a second time, and for the time of the transaction to B. C. 483, or 482.

8. Zăn Yû said, 'But at present, Chwan-yü is strong and near to Pi; if our chief do not now take it, it will hereafter be a sorrow to his descendants.

9. Confucius said, 'Ch'iû, the superior man hates that declining to say-"I want such and such a thing," and framing explanations

10. 'I have heard that rulers of States and chiefs of families are not troubled lest their people should be few, but are troubled lest they should not keep their several places; that they are not troubled with fears of poverty, but are troubled with fears of a want of contented repose among the people in their several places. For when the people keep their several places, there will be no poverty; when harmony prevails, there will be no scarcity of people; and when there is such a contented repose, there will be no rebellious upsettings.

This raised him high above any mere ministers or officers of Lu. The mountain Mang is in the present district of Pi, in the department of I-chau. It was called eastern, to distinguish it from another of the same name in Shen-hsi, which was the western Mang. 且在邦域之中,— this is mentioned, to show that Chwan-yu was so situated as to give Lu no occasion for appre-社稷之臣, 'a minister of the alters to the spirits of the land and grain.' CHAP. II. I. Confucius said, 'When good government prevails in the empire, ceremonies, music, and punitive military expeditions proceed from the son of Heaven. When bad government prevails in the empire, ceremonies, music, and punitive military expeditions proceed from the princes. When these things proceed from the princes, as a rule, the cases will be few in which they do not lose their power in ten generations. When they proceed from the Great officers of the princes, as a rule, the cases will be few in which they do not lose their power in five generations. The application of these strange proverbial sayings is to Confucius himself, as, from his superiority, incapable of being affected by evil communications. 4. This paragraph is variously explained. By some, A is taken as the name of a star; so that the meaning is -'Am I, like such and such a star, to be hung up, &c.?' But we need not depart from the proper meaning of the characters. Chu Hsi, with Ho Yen, takes 不食 actively:- 'A gourd can be hung up, because it does not need sively, as in the translation. in the

The older commentators my that it is a caution to men to pay attention to their conduct rather than to their words. This interpretation is far-fetched, but, on the other hand, it is not easy to defend Confucius from the charge of presumption in comparing himself to 3天何言哉, 'Does Heaven 14, -see on IX. ziv. is a common speak, -better than what does Heaven my?

CHAP. XX. Zû Pei wished to see Confucius, but Confucius declined, on the ground of being sick, to see him. When the bearer of this message went out at the door, (the master) took his lute and sang to it, in order that Pei might hear him.

CHAP. XXI. 1. Tsåi Wo asked about the three years' mourning for parents, saying that one year was long enough.

2. 'If the superior man,' said he, 'abstains for three years from the observances of propriety, those observances will be quite lost. If for three years he abstains from music, music will be ruined.

3. 'Within a year the old grain is exhausted, and the new grain has sprung up, and, in procuring fire by friction, we go through all the changes of wood for that purpose. After a complete year, the mourning may stop.

4. The Master said, 'If you were, after a year, to eat good rice, and wear embroidered clothes, would you feel at ease?' 'I should, replied Wo.

20. How Confucius could be 'not at home,' AND YET GIVE INTIMATION TO THE VISITOR OF HIS PRESENCE. Of Zû Pei little is known. He was a small officer of Lû, and had at one time been in attendance on Confucius to receive his instructions. There must have been some reason -some fault in him - why Confucius would not see him on the occasion in the text; and that he might understand that it was on that account, and not because he was really sick, that he declined his visit, the sage acted as we are told;—see the Li Chi, XVIII. Sect. II. i. 22. It is said that his fault was in trying to see the Master without using the services of an see the 35th Book of the Li Chi. A man in a superior situation, having valour without righteousness, will be guilty of insubordination; one of the lower people, having valour without righteousness, will commit robbery.'

CHAP. XXIV. 1. Tsze-kung said, 'Has the superior man his hatreds also?' The Master said, 'He has his hatreds. He hates those who proclaim the evil of others. He hates the man who.

of which there are two kinds,—the 圍棋, played with 361 pieces, and referred to the ancient Yao as its inventor, and the 柔杖, or ivory chees, played with 32 pieces, and having a great analogy to our European game.
Its invention is attributed to the emperor Wû, of the later Châu dynasty, in our 6th century. It was probably borrowed from India. 意之,

23. VALOUE TO BE VALUED OF IT IN SUBORDINA-TION TO RIGHTROUSNESS; ITS CONSEQUENCES APART FROM THAT. The first two 君子 are to be understood of the man superior in virtue. The third brings in the idea of rank, with 人人 as its correlate.

24. CHARACTERS DISLIKED BY CONFUCIUS AND TSZE-KUNG. I. Taze-kung is understood to have intended Confucius himself by 'the superior man.' 流 is here in the sense of 'class.' 下流一下位之人, 'men of low station.' In 君子亦有惡乎 the force of 亦 is to oppose 惡 to 愛, 'hatreds,' to 'loves.' 2. Hsing Ping takes 子貢 as the nominative to ⊟,—'he went on to say, I, Ty's, also,' &c.

being in a low station, slanders his superiors. He hates those who have valour merely, and are unobservant of propriety. He hates those who are forward and determined, and, at the same time, of contracted understanding,

2. The Master then inquired, 'Ts'ze, have you also your hatreds?' Tsze-kung replied, 'I hate those who pry out matters, and ascribe the knowledge to their wisdom. I hate those who are only not modest, and think that they are valorous. I hate those who make known secrets, and think that they are straightforward.

CHAP. XXV. The Master said, 'Of all people, girls and servants are the most difficult to behave to. If you are familiar with them, they lose their humility. If you maintain a reserve towards them, they are discontented.

/, 'The viscount of Wei, No. 18.' This Book, consisting of only eleven chapters, treats of various individuals famous in Chinese history, as eminent for the way in which they discharged their duties to their sovereign, or for their retirement from public service. It commemorates also some of the worthies of Confucius's days, who lived in retirement rather than be in office in so degenerate times. object of the whole is to illustrate and vindicate the course of Confucius himself.

1. THE VISCOUNTS OF WEI AND CHI, AND PI-EAN: - THREE WORTHIES OF THE YIN DYNASTY. I. Wei-taze and Chi-taze are continually repeated by Chinese, as if they were proper names. But Wei and Chi were the names of two small States, presided over by chiefs of the Taze, or fourth, degree of nobility, called viscounts, for want of a more exact term. They both appear to have been within the limits of the present Shan-hei, Wei being referred to the district of 海 城, department 路安, and Cht to 榆社, departiii. He was under the 司寇, or minister of ment . The chief of Wei was an elder Crime, but with many subordinate magistrates

The first, seeing that remonstrances availed nothing, withdrew from court, wishing to preserve the sacrifices of their family amid the ruin which he saw was impending. The second was thrown into prison, and, to escape death, feigned madness. He was used by Châu as a buffoon. Pi-kan, persisting in his remonstrances, was put barbarously to death, the tyrant having his heart torn out, that he might see, he said, a sage's heart. The 之 in 夫之 is explained by 其 (i), 'his place.' Its reference may also be to 粉, the tyrant himself. On 為之奴, compare 為之字, V. vii. 3, et al.

We may translate (), 'was dismissed from office,' or 'retired from office.' 人 = 以人.
—Some remarks akin to that in the text are ascribed to Hûi's wife. It is observed by the commentator Hû (方別), that there ought to be another paragraph, giving Confucius's judgment upon Hûi's conduct, but it has been lost.

3. How Confucius LEFT CH'1, WHEN THE DUKE COULD NOT APPRECIATE AND EMPLOY HIM. It was in the year B. C. 517 that Confucius went to Ch'1. The remarks about how he should be treated, &c., are to be understood as having taken place in consultation between the duke and his ministers, and being afterwards reported to the sage. The Mäng family (see II. v) was in the time of Confucius much weaker than the Chi. The chief of it was only the lowest noble of Lû, while the Chi was the highest. Yet for the duke of Ch'1 to treat Confucius better than the duke of Lû treated the chief of the Mäng family, was not dishonouring the sage. We must suppose that Confucius left Ch'1 because of the duke's concluding remarks.

4. How Corfucius gave up official service in Lc. In the ninth year of the duke Ting, Confucius reached the highest point of his official service. He was minister of Crime, and also, according to the general opinion, acting premier. He effected in a few months a wonderful renovation of the State, and the neighbouring countries began to fear that under his administration, Lû would overtop and subdue them all. To prevent this, the duke of Chi sent a present to Lû of fine horses and of 80 highly accomplished beauties. The duke of Lû was induced to receive these by the advice of the Head of the Chi family, Chi Sze (1), er Chi Hwan. The sage was forgotten; government was neglected. Confucius, indignant and sorrowful, withdrew from office, and for a time, from the country too.

承人, 'the people of Ch'l,' is to be understood of the duke and his ministers.

2. Confucius alighted and wished to converse with him, but Chieh-yu hastened away, so that he could not talk with him.

CHAP. VI. 1. Ch'ang-tsu and Chieh-nî were at work in the field together, when Confucius passed by them, and sent Tsze-lû to inquire for the ford.

2. Ch'ang-tsu said, 'Who is he that holds the reins in the carriage there?' Tsze-lû told him, 'It is K'ung Ch'iû.' 'Is it not K'ung Ch'iû of Lû?' asked he. 'Yes,' was the reply, to which the other rejoined, 'He knows the ford.'

Than follow one who merely withdraws from this one and that one, had you not better follow those who have withdrawn from the world altogether?' With this he fell to covering up the seed, and proceeded with his work, without stopping.

4. Tsze-lû went and reported their remarks, when the Master observed with a sigh, 'It is impossible to associate with birds and beasts, as if they were the same with us. The compiler of this chapter can hardly have been a disciple

CHAP. VII. 1. Tsze-lû, following the Master, happened to fall behind, when he met an old man, carrying across his shoulder on a staff a basket for weeds. Tsze-lû said to him, 'Have you seen my master, Sir!' The old man replied, 'Your four limbs are unaccustomed to toil; you cannot distinguish the five kinds of grain: -who is your master?' With this, he planted his staff in the ground, and proceeded to weed.

2. Tsze-lû joined his hands across his breast, and stood before him.

3. The old man kept Tsze-lû to pass the night in his house, killed a fowl, prepared millet, and feasted him. He also introduced to him his two sons.

4. Next day, Tsze-lû went on his way, and reported his adventure. The Master said, 'He is a recluse,' and sent Tsze-lû back to see him again, but when he got to the place, the old man was gone.

5. Tsze-lû then said to the family, 'Not to take office is not

When the opportunity of gain is presented to him, he thinks of In sacrificing, his thoughts are reverential. righteousness. mourning, his thoughts are about the grief which he should feel. Such a man commands our approbation indeed.

Chap. II. Tsze-chang said, 'When a man holds fast virtue, but without seeking to enlarge it, and believes right principles, but without firm sincerity, what account can be made of his existence or non-existence?'

儿, 'Tsze-chang, No. 19.' Confucius does not appear personally in this Book at all. Chû Hsî says:- 'This Book records the words of the disciples, Tsze-haia being the most frequent speaker, and Taze-kung next to him. For in the Confucian school, after Yen Yüan there was no one of such discriminating understanding as Taze-kung, and after Tsång Shån no one of such firm sincerity as Taze-hsiå.' The disciples deliver their sentiments very much after the manner of their master, and yet we can discern a falling off from him.

CHAP. III. The disciples of Tsze-hsia asked Tsze-chang about the principles that should characterize mutual intercourse. chang asked, 'What does Tsze-hsia say on the subject?' replied, 'Tsze-hsiâ says:-"Associate with those who can advantage you. Put away from you those who cannot do so." Tsze-chang observed, 'This is different from what I have learned. The superior man honours the talented and virtuous, and bears with all. He praises the good, and pities the incompetent. Am I possessed of great talents and virtue?-who is there among men whom I will not bear with? Am I devoid of talents and virtue?—men will put me away from them. What have we to do with the putting away of others?

But it is better to take the clauses as co-ordinate, and not dependent on each other. With 執德不弘 we may compare XV. xxviii, which suggests the taking A actively. The two last clauses are perplexing. Chû Hsî, after Ån-kwo apparently, makes them equivalent to-'is of no consideration in the world' (猶言不足輕重).

3. The dipperent opinions of Teze-helâ and Trze-charg on the principles which should REGULATE OUR INTERCOURSE WITH OTHERS. On the disciples of Taze-haia, see the 集器, in loc. It is strange to me that they should begin their answer to Taxe-chang with the designation 于夏, instead of saying 夫子, 'our husbandry, divining, and the healing art, are 可者, the 可 is taken differently by the old interpreters and the new. Hsing Ping expounds:—'If the man be worthy, fit for you to have intercourse with, then have it; but if he be not worthy,' &c. On the other hand, we find :- 'If the man will advantage you, he is a fit person (是可者); then maintain intercourse with him, &c. This seems to be merely carrying out Confucius's rule, I. viii. $ Chû Haî, however, approves of Taze-changs censure of it, while he thinks also that Tass-chang's own view is defective.—Pao Hsian says,—'Our intercourse with friends should be, according to Tsze-hsia's rule; general inter-course according to Tsze-chang's.

CHAP. V. Tsze-hsia said, 'He, who from day to day recognises what he has not yet, and from month to month does not forget what

11. THE GREAT VIRTUES DEMAND THE CHIEF ATTENTION, AND THE SMALL ONES MAY BE SOMEWHAT VIOLATED:—BY TEXZ-HELL. The sentiment here is very questionable. A different turn, however, is given to the chapter in the older interpreters. We may get that meaning out of the character, which = 'to examine,' 'to look for.' A good deal has to be supplied, here and in the sentences below, to bring out the meaning as in the translation.

It is explained by f, and seems to me to be nearly = our 'on the whole.' figuring out,' i. e. from this, and 'presenting,' i. e. to that. The whole is understood to refer to rewarding men for their services, and doing it in an unwilling and stingy manner.

My master, the philosopher Ch'ang, says: - The Great Learning is a Book transmitted by the Confucian School, and forms the gate by which first learners enter into virtue. That we can now perceive the order in which the ancients pursued their learning is solely owing to the preservation of this work, the Analects and Mencius coming after it. Learners must commence their course with this, and then it may be hoped they will be kept from error.'

Title of the Work.-大學, 'The Great | paraphrasts who follow him says-大是 Learning.' I have pointed out, in the prolegomena, the great differences which are found among Chinese commentators on this Work, on almost every point connected with the criticism and interpretation of it. We encounter them here on the very threshold. The name itself is simply the adoption of the two commencing characters of the treatise, according to the custom noticed at the beginning of the Analects; but in explaining those two characters, the old and new schools differ widely. Anciently, 大 was read as X, and the oldest commentator whose notes on the work are preserved, Chang K'ang-ch'ang, in the last half of the 2nd century, said that the Book was called 大學, 以其記博學,可以爲政, 'be. cause it recorded that extensive learning, which was available for the administration of government.' This view is approved by K'ung Yingu(孔類達), whose expansion of K'angchang's notes, written in the first half of the 7th century, still remains. He says—大學

大人,與小子對,'大means adults, in opposition to children. The grounds of Chû Hsî's interpretation are to be found in his very elegant preface to the Book, where he tries to make it out, that we have here the subjects taught in the advanced schools of antiquity. I have contented myself with the title—'The Great Learning,' which is a literal translation of the characters, whether read as 太學《大學

THE INTRODUCTORY MOTE.—I have thought it well to translate this, and all the other notes and supplements appended by Chû Hsi to the original text, because they appear in nearly all the editions of the work, which fall into the hands of students, and his view of the classics is what must be regarded as the orthodox one. The translation, which is here given, is also, for the most part, according to his views, though my own differing opinion will be found freely expressed in the notes. Another version, following the order of the text, before it was transposed by him and his masters, the Ch'ang, and without reference to his interpretations, will be found in the translation of the 至道矣,'大'學 means the highest prin- Li Chi.—子程子,—see note to the Analects, ciples.' THE TEXT OF CONFUCIUS.

1. What the Great Learning teaches, is—to illustrate illustrious virtue; to renovate the people; and to rest in the highest excellence.

2. The point where to rest being known, the object of pursuit is then determined; and, that being determined, a calm unperturbedness may be attained to. To that calmness there will succeed a tranquil repose. In that repose there may be careful deliberation.

as 💯 🂢 is found continually in the Analects | not in the same condition as himself.—'The for the Chi, i. e. the chief of the Chi family. For how can we say that 'The Great Learning' is a work left by Confucius? Even Chu Hst ascribes only a small portion of it to the Master, and makes the rest to be the production of the disciple Tsang, and before his time, the whole work was attributed generally to the sage's grandson. I must take 利氏 as = 利門, the Confucian school.

THE TEXT OF CONFUCIUS. Such Chû Hsì, as will be seen from his concluding note, determines this chapter to be, and it has been divided into two sections (), the first containing three paragraphs, occupied with the the second containing four paragraphs, occupied with the particulars (係目) of those.

Par. 1. The heads of the Great Learning. 學之道,—'the way of the Great Learning,'道 being-修為之方法,'the methods of cultivating and practising it, —the Great Learning, that is. 在, 'is in.' The first is used as a verb ; the second as an adjective, qualifying . The illustrious virtue is the virtuous nature which man derives from Heaven. This is perverted as man grows up, through defects of the physical constitution, through inward lusts, and through outward seductions; and the great business of life should be, to bring the nature back to its original purity.—'To renovate the people,' this object of the Great Learning is made out, by changing the character 🔀 of the old text into . The Ch'ing first proposed the alteration, and Chu Hai approved of it. When a man has entirely illustrated his own illustrious nature, he has to proceed to bring about the highest excellence' is understood of the two previous matters. It is not a third and different object of pursuit, but indicates a perseverance in the two others, till they are perfectly accomplished.-According to these explanations, the objects contemplated in the Great Learning are not three, but two. Suppose them realised, and we should have the whole world of mankind perfectly good, every individual what he ought to be !

Against the above interpretation, we have to consider the older and simpler. (a is there not the nature, but simply virtue, or virtuous conduct, and the first object in the Great Learning is the making of one's self more and more illustrious in virtue, or the practice of benevolence, reverence, filial piety, kindne and sincerity. See the 故本大學註 in loc.—There is nothing, of course, of the renovating of the people, in this interpretation. The second object of the Great Learning is 親民=親愛於民, to love the people. The third object is said by Ying-ta to be in resting in conduct which is perfectly good (在止處於至善之行), and here also, there would seem to be only two objects, for what essential distinction can we make between the first and third? There will be occasion below to refer to the reasons for changing into I, and their unsatisfies toriness. 'To love the people' is doubties, the second thing taught by the Great Learn ing.—Having the heads of the Great Learning now before us, according to both interpreta-tions of it, we feel that the student of it should be a sovereign, and not an ordinary man.

Par. 2. The mental process by which the pain of rest may be attained. I confess that I do no well understand this paragraph, in the re of its parts in itself, nor in relation to the of the chapter. Chu Hat says :-- ' | is the same result in every other man, till 'under ground where we ought to rest;'—name heaven' there be not an individual, who is highest excellence mentioned above.

and that deliberation will be followed by the attainment of the desired end.

3. Things have their root and their branches. Affairs have their end and their beginning. To know what is first and what is last will lead near to what is taught in the Great Learning.

4. The ancients who wished to illustrate illustrious virtue throughout the kingdom, first ordered well their own States. Wishing to order well their States, they first regulated their families. Wishing to regulate their families, they first cultivated their persons, Wishing to cultivate their persons, they first rectified their hearts.

this be known in the cutset, where is the ne- contend that the illustration of virtue and cessity for the k, or 'careful deliberation,' which issues in its attainment? The paraphrasts make Al Lt to embrace even all that is understood by 格物致知 below.— Ying-ta is perhaps rather more intelligible. He says:— When it is known that the rest is to be in the perfectly good, then the mind has fixedness. So it is free from concupiscence, and can be still, not engaging in disturbing pursuits. That stillness leads to a repose and harmony of the feelings. That state of the feelings fits for careful thought about affairs 能思慮於事), and thence it results it what is right in affairs is attained.' Perhaps, the paragraph just intimates that the hisests of the Great Learning being so great, a saim, serious thoughtfulness is required in mosseding to seek their attainment.

Per. 3. The order of things and methods in the two preceding paragraphs. So, according to Cha Risl, does this paragraph wind up the two preceding. 'The illustration of virtue,' he sayn, 'is the rest, and the renovation of the people is the empletien (literally, the brunches). Knowing where to rest is the beginning, and being able to attain in the and. The root and the hearinging. is the end. The root and the beginning renovation of the people are doings (🌉), and not things (2011). According to them, the things are the person, heart, thoughts, &c., mentioned below, which are the root, and the family, kingdom, and empire, which are 'the branches.' The affairs or some are the various processes put forth on those things.-This, it seems to me, is the correct interpretation.

Par. 4. The different sleps by which the illus tion of illustrious virtue throughout the kingdo to brought about 明明德於天 understood by the school of Chû Hi understood by the school of Chû Hat as embracing the two first objects of the Great Learning, the illustration, namely, of virtue and the renovation of the people. We are no and the renovation of the people. We are not aided in determining the meaning by the syn-thetic arrangement of the different steps in the next paragraph, for the result arrived at the is simply—天下平, the whole kingdom was made tranquil.—Ying the comment is— 章明已之明德使徧於天下, to display illustriously their own illustrious virtue (or virtues), making them reach through the whole kingdom.' But the influence must be very much transformative. Of the ser are salet is first. The completion and end are steps described, the central one is the sale is first. The adherents of the old commentators are, on the contrary, that this paragraph is intreductory to the succeeding ones. They is called A, 'the root,' in par. 6. This requires 'the heart to be correct,' and that again As that exists in the Li Chi, the 7th paragraph 'that the thoughts be sincere.' Chù Hsi defines of this chapter is followed by the At Ant 心。身之所主, 'what the body has for its lord, and 意 as 心之所發, what the (Y) sends forth.' Ying-ta says :- 案題 包 萬盧謂之心,'that which comprehends and embraces all considerings is called the 心; 爲情所意念謂之意, the thoughts under emotion are what is called 意.' 心 is then the metaphysical part of our nature, all that we comprehend under the terms of mind or soul, heart, and spirit. This is conceived of as quiescent, and when its activity is aroused, then we have thoughts and purposes relative to what affects it. The 'being sincere' is explained by 🍍 , 'real.' The sincerity of the thoughts is to be obtained by 女女 知, which means, according to Chû Hsî, carrying our knowledge to its utmost extent, with the desire that there may be nothing which it shall not embrace.' This knowledge, finally, is realised 在格物. The same authority takes //////////, 'things,' as embracing, 事, 'affairs,' as well. 格 sometimes = 至, 'to come or extend to,' and assuming that the 'coming to' here is by study, he makes it = to examine exhaustively, so that '格物 means exhausting by examination the principles of things and affairs, with the desire that their uttermost point may be reached.'-We feel that this explanation cannot be correct, or that, if it be correct, the teaching of the Chinese sage is far beyond and above the condition and capacity of men. How can we suppose that, in order to secure sincerity of thought and our self-cultivation, there is necessarily the study of all the phenomena of physics and metaphysics, and of the events of history? Moreover, Chu Hsi's view of the two last clauses is a consequence of the alterations which he adopts in the order of the text.

of this chapter is followed by 此為知本 此為知之至也, which he has trans ferred and made the 5th chapter of annotations. Ying-ta's comment on it is:- 'The root means the person. The person (i.e. personal character) being regarded as the root, if ene can know his own person, this is the knowledge of the root; yea, this is the very extremity of knowledge. If we apply this conclusion to the clauses under notice, it is said that wishing to make our thoughts sincere we mu first carry to the utmost our self-knowledge, and this extension of self-knowledge 在格易 Now, the change of the style indicates that the relation of 致知 and 格物 is different from that of the parts in the other clauses. B is not said that to get the one thing we must first do the other. Rather it seems to me that the 格物 is a consequence of 较知, that in it is seen the other. Now, , 'a rule or pattern,' and IF, 'to correct,' are accepted meanings of 核, and 坳 being taken gener ally and loosely as = things, 在格物 will tell us that, when his self-knowledge is complete, a man is a law to himself, measuring and measuring correctly, all things with which he has to do, not led astray or beclouded by them. This is the interpretation strongly insisted on by 羅仲壽, the author of the 古本大學註辨 It is the only we into any sympathy with which I can bring my mind. In harmony with it, I would print 知在格物 as a paragraph by itself, be tween the analytic and synthetic processed described in paragraphs 4.5. Still there are difficulties connected with it, and I leave the vexed questions, regretting my own inabil to clear them up. Par. 5. The synthesis of the preceding process

Observe the Tr of the preceding paragraph is

The preceding chapter of classical text is in the words of Confucius, handed down by the philosopher Tsang. The ten chapters of explanation which follow contain the views of Tsang, and were recorded by his disciples. In the old copies of the work, there appeared considerable confusion in these, from the disarrangement of the tablets. But now, availing myself of the decisions of the philosopher Chang, and having examined anno the classical text, I have arranged it in order, as follows :-

COMMENTARY OF THE PHILOSOPHER TSĂNG.

CHAPTER I. 1. In the Announcement to K'ang, it is said, 'He was able to make his virtue illustrious.'

CONCLUDING NOTE. It has been shown in the | chapters. It was, no doubt, the occurrence of prolegomena that there is no ground for the distinction made here between so much ching attributed to Confucius, and so much (11), or commentary, ascribed to his disciple Tsang. The invention of paper is ascribed to Ts'ai Lun (祭倫), an officer of the Han dynasty, in the time of the emperor Hwo (天11), A. D. 89-105. Before that time, and long after also, slips of wood and of bamboo () were used to write and engrave upon. We can easily conceive how a collection of them might get disarranged, but whether those containing the Great Learning did so is a question vehemently · 黃, 'the chapter of classic on the right;' 如左,'on the left;' these are expressions = our 'preceding,' and 'as follows,' indicating the Chinese method of writing and printing from the right side of a manuscript or book on to the left.

COMMENTARY OF THE PHILOSOPHER TSANG.

1. THE ILLUSTRATION OF ILLUSTRIOUS VIRTUE. The student will do well to refer here to the text of 'The Great Learning, as it appears in the Li Chi. He will then see how a considerable portion of it has been broken up, and transposed to form this and the five succeeding

The old commentators connect them with the great business of making the thoughts sincere. I. See the Shū-ching, V. ix. 3. The words are part of the address of king Wū to his brother Făng (對), called also K'ang-shû (康 权; 献, the honorary epithet) on appointing him to the marquisate of . The above first chapter of commentary explains the illustration of illustrious virtue.

1. On the bathing-tub of Tang, the following words were engraved:—'If you can one day renovate yourself, do so from day to day. Yea, let there be daily renovation.

2. In the Announcement to K'ang, it is said, 'To stir up the new people.

The other school take the phrase more generally, = the 題道, 'displayed ways' of Heaven. 3. See the Shuching, L.i. 2. It is of the emperor Yao that this is said. 4. The property must be referred to the three quotations.

2. The renovation of the propie. Here the character 31, 'new,' 'to renovate,' occurs five times, and it was to find something correspond-

The description of the chapter, as above, is a misnomer. 1. This fact about Tang's bathing-tub had come down by tradition. At least, we do not now find the mention of it anywh but here. It was customary among the a cients, as it is in China at the present day, It was customary among the anengrave, all about them, on the articles of th furniture, such moral aphorisms and lessons. 2. CHAP. III. 1. In the Book of Poetry, it is said, 'The royal domain of a thousand li is where the people rest.'

2. In the Book of Poetry, it is said, 'The twittering yellow bird rests on a corner of the mound.' The Master said, When it rests, it knows where to rest. Is it possible that a man should not be equal to this bird?'

3. In the Book of Poetry, it is said, 'Profound was king Wan. With how bright and unceasing a feeling of reverence did he regard his resting-places!' As a sovereign, he rested in benevolence. As a minister, he rested in reverence. As a son, he rested in filial piety. As a father, he rested in kindness. In communication with his subjects, he rested in good faith.

4. In the Book of Poetry, it is said, 'Look at that winding-course

'As we chisel and then grind, indicates that of self-culture. 'How grave is he and dignified!' indicates the feeling of cautious reverence. It is a species of oriole. The Tare worthy of observation. If the first chapter of the classical text, as Chu Hai calls it, really contains the words of Confucius, we might have expected it to be headed by these characters. 12 11, literally, 'in resting.' 3. It is to be understood before 修, 恂慄, and 威儀.—The transposition of this paragraph by Chu Het to this place does seem unhappy. It ought evidently to come in connexion with the work of 4 9. 5. See the Shih-ching, IV. i. Sect. I. Ode IV. st. 3. The former kings are Wan and Wû, the founders of the Chan dynasty. 於離 are an interjection, read we ke. In the Shih-ching we have Lat I. 5. In the Book of Poetry, it is said, 'Ah! the former kings are not forgotten.' Future princes deem worthy what they deemed worthy, and love what they loved. The common people delight in what delighted them, and are benefited by their beneficial arrangements. It is on this account that the former kings, after they have quitted the world, are not forgotten.

The above third chapter of commentary explains resting in the highest excellence.

The Master said, 'In hearing litigations, I am like any other body. What is necessary is to cause the people to have no litigations?' So, those who are devoid of principle find it impossible to carry out their speeches, and a great awe would be struck into men's minds;—this is called knowing the root.

2. This is called the perfecting of knowledge.

The above fifth chapter of the commentary explained the meaning of investigating things and carrying knowledge to the utmost extent,' but it is now lost. I have ventured to take the views of the scholar Chang to supply it, as follows: - The meaning of the expression, 'The perfecting of knowledge depends on the investigation of things,' is this: -If we wish to carry our knowledge to the utmost, we must investigate the principles of all things we come into contact with, for the intelligent mind of man is certainly formed to know, and there is not a single thing in which its principles do not inhere. But so long as all principles are not investigated, man's knowledge is incomplete. On this account, the Learning for Adults, at the outset of its lessons, instructs the learner, in regard to all things in the world, to proceed from what knowledge he has of their principles, and pursue his investigation of them, till he reaches the extreme point. After exerting himself in this way for a long time, he will suddenly find himself possessed of a wide and furreaching penetration. Then, the qualities of all things, whether external er internal, the subtle or the coarse, will all be apprehended, and the mind, in its entire substance and its relations to things, will be perfectly intelligent. This is called the investigation of things. This is called the perfection of knowledge.

CHAP. VI. 1. What is meant by 'making the thoughts sincere,' is the allowing no self-deception, as when we hate a bad smell, and as when we love what is beautiful. This is called self-enjoyment. Therefore, the superior man must be watchful over himself when he is alone.

This is an instance of the saying—'What truly is within will be manifested without.' Therefore, the superior man must be watchful over himself when he is alone.

3. The disciple Tsang said, 'What ten eyes behold, what ten hands point to, is to be regarded with reverence!'

Chang Kangfor it in the translation. The Chinese make ch'ang explains #2 (read s'one) by . 'large.' the lungs the seat of righteousness, and the liver the seat of benevolence. Compare 🚓 于其數心履腎腸in the Shû-ching, IV. vii. Sect. III. 3. 3. The use of 曾子 at the beginning of this paragraph (and extending, perhaps, over to the next) should suffice to show, that the whole work is not his, as assumed by Chu Hst. 'Ten' is a round number, put for many. The recent commentator, Lo Chung-fan, refers Tsang's expressions to the multitude of spiritual beings, servants of Heaven or God, who dwell in the regions of the air, and are continually beholding men's conduct. But they are probably only an em-phatic way of exhibiting what is said in the preceding paragraph. 4. This paragraph is commonly ascribed to Teang Shan, but whether correctly so or not cannot be positively affirmed. It is of the same purport as the two preceding, difficulty.

ch'ang explains # (read p'ang) by *, 'large,' and Chû Hai by 安舒, as in the translation. The meaning is probably the same.—It is only the first of these paragraphs from which we can in any way ascertain the views of the writer on making the thoughts sincere. The other paragraphs contain only illustration or enforcement. Now the gist of the first paragraph seems to be in 毋目欺, 'allowing no self-deception.' After knowledge has been carried to the utmost, this remains to be done, and it is not true that, when knowledge has been completed, the thoughts become sincere. This fact overthrows Chû Hai's interpretation of the vexed passages in what he calls the text of Confucius. Let the student examine his note appended to this chapter, and he will see that Chû was not unconscious of this pinch of the

Here Chû Hsi, following his master Ch'ang, would again alter the text, and change the second p into But this is unnecessary. 1. What is meant by 'The regulation of ones family depends on the cultivation of his person,' is this: -- Men are partial where they feel affection and love; partial where they despise and dislike; partial where they stand in awe and reverence; partial where they feel sorrow and compassion; partial where they are arrogant and rude. Thus it is that there are few men in the world, who love and at the same time know the bad qualities of the object of their love, or who hate and yet know the excellences of the object of their hatred.

2. Hence it is said, in the common adage. 'A man does not know the wickedness of his son; he does not know the richness of his growing corn.'

3. This is what is meant by saying that if the person be not cultivated, a man cannot regulate his family.

IN ORDER TO THE REQULATION OF THE PANILY. The lesson here is evidently, that men are continually falling into error, in consequence of the partiality of their feelings and affections. How this error affects their personal cultivation, and interferes with the regulating of their families, is not specially indicated. r. The old interpreters seem to go far astray in their interpretation. They take 之in 之其所 親 妙, and the other clauses, as = 道, 'to so to, and 🔯 as synonymous with 🥰, 'to compare. Ying ta thus expands K'ang-ch'ang the clause that follows it being construed as on人之其所親愛而辟焉一kibe regent after人之 敖-傲, 'proud,' VOL. 1.

8. THE NECESSITY OF CULTIVATING THE PERSON, | Suppose I go to that man. When I see that he is virtuous, I feel affection for, and love him. I ought then to turn round and compare him with myself. Since he is virtuous and I love him, then, if I cultivate myself and be virtuous, I shall so be able in like manner to make all men feel affection for and love me. In a similar way the other clauses are dealt with. Chu Hal takes Z as= 10, 'in regard to, and F (read 9") as = 15, 'partial,' 'one sided.' Even his opponent, Lo Chung-fan, interprets here in the same way. But Z is CHAP. IX. 1. What is meant by 'In order rightly to govern the State, it is necessary first to regulate the family,' is this :- It is not possible for one to teach others, while he cannot teach his own family. Therefore, the ruler, without going beyond his family, completes the lessons for the State. There is filial piety:-therewith the sovereign should be served. There is fraternal submission: -therewith elders and superiors should be served. There is kindness:—therewith the multitude should be treated.

2. In the Announcement to K'ang, it is said, 'Act as if you were watching over an infant.' If (a mother) is really anxious about it, though she may not hit exactly the wants of her infant, she will not be far from doing so. There never has been a girl who learned to bring up a child, that she might afterwards marry.

4. Yao and Shun led on the kingdom with benevolence, and the people followed them. Chieh and Châu led on the kingdom with violence, and the people followed them. The orders which these issued were contrary to the practices which they loved, and so the people did not follow them. On this account, the ruler must himself be possessed of the good qualities, and then he may require them in the people. He must not have the bad qualities in himself, and then he may require that they shall not be in the people. Never has there been a man, who, not having reference to his own character and wishes in dealing with others, was able effectually to instruct them.

CHAP. X. 1. What is meant by 'The making the whole kingdom peaceful and happy depends on the government of his State,' is this :- When the sovereign behaves to his aged, as the aged should be behaved to, the people become filial; when the sovereign behaves to his elders, as the elders should be behaved to, the people learn brotherly submission; when the sovereign treats compassionately the young and helpless, the people do the same. Thus the ruler has a principle with which, as with a measuring-square, he may regulate his conduct.

The key to this chapter is in the phrase 聚矩之道, the principle of reci-procity, the doing to others as we would that they should do to us, though here, as elsewhere, it is put forth negatively. It is implied in the expression of the last chapter, -所藏乎 k kill, but it is here discussed at length, and shown in its highest application. The following analysis of the chapter is translated ter explains the well-ordering of the State, and the tranquillization of the kingdom. The remains, according as the people's hearts are greatest stress is to be laid on the phrase—the measuring-aquars. That, and the expression in the general commentary—loving and hating what the people love and hate, and not thinking only of the profit, exhaust the teaching of the chapter. It is divided into five parts. The first, embracing the first two paragraphs, teaches, that the way to make the kingdom tranquil and happy is in the projection of the measuring-aguars. the principle of the measuring square. The second part embraces three paragraphs, and teaches that the application of the measuringsquare is seen in loving and hating, in common with the people. The consequences of losing and gaining are mentioned for the first time in

3. In the Book of Poetry, it is said, 'How much to be rejoiced in are these princes, the parents of the people!' When a prince loves what the people love, and hates what the people hate, then is he what is called the parent of the people.

The Afta part tant result of loving and hating in common with the people is seen in making the root the primary subject, and the branch only secondary. Here, in par. rr, mention is again made of gaining and losing, illustrating the meaning of the quotation in it, and showing that to the collection or dissipation of the people the decree of Heaven is attached. The fourth part consists of five paragraphs, and exhibits the extreme results of loving and hating, as shared with the people, or on one's own private feeling, and it has special reference to the sovereign's employment of ministers, because there is nothing in the principle more important than that. The 19th paragraph speaks of gaining and lesing, for the third time, showing that from the 4th paragraph downwards, in reference both to the hearts of the people and the decree the 4th paragraph downwards, in reference both to the hearts of the people and the decree first characters are verbs, with the meaning of Heaven, the application or non-application which it requires so many words to bring out

It having been seen that the ruler's example is so influential, it follows that the minds of all men are the same in sympathy and tendency. He has then only to take his own mind, and measure therewith the minds of others. If he act accordingly, the grand result—the kingdom tranquil and happy—will ensue. 2. The above tenth chapter of commentary explains the government of the State, and the making the kingdom peaceful and happy.

There are thus, in all, ten chapters of commentary, the first four of which discuss, in a general manner, the scope of the principal topic of the Work; while the other six go particularly into an exhibition of the work required in its subordinate branches. The fifth chapter contains the important subject of comprehending true excellence, and the sixth, what is the foundation of the attainment of true sincerity. Those two chapters demand the especial attention of the learner. Let not the reader despise them because of their simplicity.

My master, the philosopher Ch'ang, says:— Being without inclination to either side is called CHUNG; admitting of no change is called YUNG. By CHUNG is denoted the correct course to be pursued by all under heaven; by YUNG is denoted the fixed principle regulating all under heaven. This work contains the law of the mind, which was handed down from one to another, in the Confucian school, till Teze-eze, fearing lest in the course of time errors should arise about it, committed it to writing, and delivered it to Mencius. The Book first speaks of one principle; it next spreads this out, and embraces all things; finally, it returns and gathers them all up under the one principle. Unroll it, and it fills

THE TITLE OF THE WORK.—中庸, 'The Doc- combination, till Ch'ang I introduced that of trine of the Mean.' I have not attempted to translate the Chinese character E, as to the exact force of which there is considerable difference of opinion, both among native commentators, and among previous translators. Chẳng K'ang-ch'ăng said -Work is named III, because it records the practice of the non-deviating mind and of harmony.' He takes I in the sense of III, 'to use,' 'to employ,' which is the first given to it in the dictionary, and is found in the Shuching, I. i. par. 9. As to the meaning of and M, see chap. i. par. 4. 1. It has been stated, in the prolegomena, that the current division of the Chung Yung into chapters was made by Chû Hsi, as well as their subdivision into paragraphs. The thirtythree chapters which embrace the work, are again arranged by him in five divisions, as will be seen from his supplementary notes. first and last chapters are complete in themselves, as in the introduction and conclusion of the treatise. The second part contains ten chapters; the third, nine; and the fourth, twelve.

Par. 1. The principles of duty have their root in the evidenced will of Heaven, and their full exhibition in the teaching of sages. By '27, or 'nature,' is to be understood the nature of man, though Cha Hai generalizes it so as to embrace that of brutes also; but only man can be cognizant of the tio and chico. 🏟 he defines by 🔷, to command,' 'to order.' But we must take it as in a gloss on a passage from the Yl-ching. quoted in the dictionary.一合 者 票 受, 'Hing is what men are endowed with.' Chû also says that the is just 11, the 'principle,' characteristic of any particular nature. But this only involves the subject in mystery. His explanation of by M, 'a path,' seems to be correct, though some modern writers ob-ject to it.—What is taught seems to be this:— To man belongs a moral nature, conferred on 'good reader,' but as in the translation,—I will him by Heaven or God, by which he is constiwatchful over himself, when he is alone.

4. While there are no stirrings of pleasure, anger, sorrow, or joy, the mind may be said to be in the state of EQUILIBRIUM. When those feelings have been stirred, and they act in their due degree, there ensues what may be called the state of HARMONY. EQUILIBRIUM is the great root from which, grow all the human actings in the world, and this HARMONY is the universal path which they all should pursue.

Par. 3. Chû Hsî says that 🎇 is 'a dark place; 'that means 'small matters;' and that is 'the place which other men do not know, and is known only to one's self.' There would thus hardly be here any advance from the last paragraph. It seems to me that the secrecy must be in the recesses of one's own heart, and the minute things, the springs of thought and stirrings of purpose there. The full development of what is intended here is probably to be found in all the subsequent pasnges about 🚉 , or 'sincerity.' See 🍱 🎮 合集,中庸説, in loa

In the first chapter which is given above, Tsze-sze states the views which had been handed down to him, as the basis of his discourse. First, it shows clearly how the path of duty is to be traced to its origin in Heaven, and is unchangeable, while the substance of it is provided in ourselves, and may not be departed from. Next, it speaks of the importance of preserving and nourishing this, and of exercising a watchful self-scrutiny with reference to it. Finally, it speaks of the meritorious achievements and transforming influence of sage and spiritual men in their highest extent. The wish of Tsze-sze was that hereby the learner should direct his thoughts inwards, and by searching in himself, there find these

This chapter is what the writer Yang called it,—'The sum of the whole work.' In the ten chapters which follow, Texe-sze quotes the words of the Master to complete the meaning of this.

CHAP. II. 1. Chung-ni said, 'The superior man embodies the course of the Mean; the mean man acts contrary to the course of the Mean.

2. 'The superior man's embodying the course of the Mean is because he is a superior man, and so always maintains the Mean. The mean man's acting contrary to the course of the Mean is because he is a mean man, and has no caution.'

Ying-ta expounds:—'Heaven and earth will get their correct place, and the processes of production and completion will go on according to their principles, so that all things will be nourished and fostered.'

CONCLUDING NOTE.. The writer Yang, A.D. 1053-1135, quoted here, was a distinguished scholar and author in the Sung dynasty. He was a disciple of Ch'ang Hao, and a friend both of him and his brother 1.

2. Only the superior man can follow the Mean; the mean man is alwars violating it.

I. Why Confucius should here be quoted by his designation, or marriage name, is a moot-point. It is said by some that disciples might in this way refer to their teacher, and a grandson to his grandfather, but such a rule is constituted ings in view, and the superior to the superior to their teacher, and a grandson to his grandfather, but such a rule is constituted ings in view, and the superior to the superior to their teacher.

CHAP. III. The Master said, 'Perfect is the virtue which is according to the Mean! Rare have they long been among the people, who could practise it!'

CHAP. IV. 1. The Master said, 'I know how it is that the path of the Mean is not walked in:—The knowing go beyond it, and the stupid do not come up to it. I know how it is that the path of the Mean is not understood:—The men of talents and virtue go beyond it, and the worthless do not come up to it.

virtue and conduct. 2. 君子而時中 is explained by Chu — Because he has the virtue of a superior man, and moreover is able always to manage the chung.' But I rather think that the chun-tere here is specially to be referred to the same as described in I. ii, and 用=正用. Wang Sû, the famous scholar the third century, quotes 小人之中庸, with D before III, of which Chû Hsi approves. If y be not introduced into the text, it must certainly be understood. 是懶 is the opposite of 戒慎,恐懼, in I. ii.— This, and the ten chapters which follow, all quote the words of Confucius with reference to the 中庸, to explain the meaning of the first chapter; and 'though there is no connexion of composition between them,' says Chû Hai, 'they are all related by their meaning.'

3. THE RABITY, LONG EXISTING IN CONFUCIUS'S OF THE PRACTICE OF THE MEAN. See the Analects, VI. xxvii. K'ang-ch'ang and Ying-ta to all the actions of ordinary life, and might be take the last clause as = 'few can practise it long.' But the view in the translation is better.

The change from 仲尼日 to 子日 is observable.

4. How it was that yew were able to PRAC-TIME THE MEAN. 1. The may be referred to the 道 in the first chapter; immediately following 中庸 in the last, I translate it here-'the path of the Mean.' 知 者 and 賢者 are not to be understood as meaning the truly wise and the truly worthy, but only those who in the degenerate times of Confucius deemed themselves to be such. The former thought the course of the Mean not worth their study, and the latter thought it not sufficiently exalted for their practice. 4, -'as,' like.' 肯 following 賢, indicates individuals of a different character, not equal to them. 2. We have here not a comparison, but an illustration, which may help to an understanding of the former paragraph, though it does not seem very apt. People do not know the true flavour of what they eat and drink, but they need not CHAP. V. The Master said, 'Alas! How is the path of the Mean untrodden!

CHAP. VI. The Master said, 'There was Shun:-He indeed was greatly wise! Shun loved to question others, and to study their words, though they might be shallow. He concealed what was bad in them, and displayed what was good. He took hold of their two extremes, determined the Mean, and employed it in his government of the people. It was by this that he was Shun!'

CHAP. VII. The Master said, 'Men all say, "We are wise;" but being driven forward and taken in a net, a trap, or a pitfall, they know not how to escape. Men all say, "We are wise;" but happening to choose the course of the Mean, they are not able to keep it stood, therefore it is not practised.' According to K'ang-ch'ang, the remark is a lament that there was no intelligent sovereign to teach the path. But the two views are reconcileable.

6. How Shun pursued the course of the MEAN. This example of Shun, it seems to me, is adduced in opposition to the knowing of chap. iv. Shun, though a sage, invited the opinions of all men, and found truth of the highest value in their simplest sayings, and was able to determine from them the course of 孰其兩端,—'the two extremes,' are understood by K'ang-ch'ang of the two errors of exceeding and coming short of the Mean. Chu Hsi makes them—'the widest differences in the opinions which he received." I conceive the meaning to be that he examined the answers which he got, in their entirety, from beginning to end. Compare 知其菌

5. Chû Hsi says:—'From not being underwas bad, and displaying what was good, was alike to encourage people to speak freely to him. All the rest is exceptical of the first 一心乙篇人也,'Hûi's playing is not 'one good point,' so much as any one. 拳 is 'the closed fist ;' 拳 ,-- 'the appearance of holding firm.'

9. The difficulty of attaining to the course or the Mean. 天下,—'the kingdom;' we ould say.... 'kingdoms,' but the Chinese know both parts is left to be drawn by the reader for | it-'all under the sky,' embracing by right, if not in fact, all kingdoms. The kingdom was made up of States, and each State of Families. See the Analects, V. vii; XII. xx. 妇, 'level;' here a verb = 7, 'to bring to perfect order.' II,-'a sharp, strong weapon,' used of swords, spears, javelins, &c. 不口能,一 literally, 'cannot be commed.'

10. OH EMERGY IN ITS RELATION TO THE MRAN. In the Analects we find Taze-lû, on various occasions, putting forward the subject of his valour (), and claiming, on the ground of it, such praise as the Master awarded to Hûi. We may suppose, with the old interpreters, that hearing Hûi commended, as in chap, viii he wanted to know whether Confucius would not allow that he also could, with his forceful only of one kingdom, and hence this name for character, seize and hold fast the Mean. 1. For and not to revenge unreasonable conduct:—this is the energy of Southern regions, and the good man makes it his study.

4. 'To lie under arms; and meet death without regret:—this is the energy of Northern regions, and the forceful make it their study.

5. 'Therefore, the superior man cultivates a friendly harmony, without being weak.—How firm is he in his energy! He stands erect in the middle, without inclining to either side.—How firm is he in his energy! When good principles prevail in the government of his country, he does not change from what he was in retirement. -How firm is he in his energy! When bad principles prevail in the country, he maintains his course to death without changing.— How firm is he in his energy!'

强 I have been disposed to coin the term | short of the Mean; and therefore 君子 'forcefulness.' Chû defines it correctly— 足以勝人之名,'the name of strength sufficient to overcome others.' 2. 面(=数) must be-'the energy which you should cultivate,' not 'which you have.' If the latter be the meaning, no farther notice of it is taken in Confucius's reply, while he would seem, in the three following paragraphs, to describe the three kinds of energy which he specifies. K'angch'ang and Ying-ta say that in it means the energy of the Middle Kingdom, the North being ' the sandy desert,' and the South, ' the country south of the Yang-tsze.' But this is not allowable. 3. That climate and situation have an influence on character is not to be denied, and the Chinese notions on the subject may be seen in the amplification of the oth of the K'ang-hai celebrated Precepts (聖論廣訓). to speak of their effects as Confucius here does is extravagant. The barbarism of the South according to the interpretation mentioned above, could not have been described by him in these terms. The energy of mildness and forbearance, thus described, is held to come taken with a low and light meaning, far short of what it has in par. 5. This practice of determining the force of phrases from the context makes the reading of the Chinese classics perplexing to a student. 居之,—see the Analects, XII. xiv. 4. A., 'the lappel in front of a coat; 'also 'a mat.' 在金草, 'to make a mat of the leather dress (正) and weapons (. This energy of the North, it is said, is in excess of the Mean, and the to, at the beginning of par. 5, 'therefore,' = 'those two kinds of energy being thus respectively in defect and excess.' 矯 is 强貌, 'the appearance of being energetic. This illustrates the energy which is in exact accord with the Mean, in the individual's treatment of others, in his regulation of himself, and in relation to public affairs. 有道,無道;-often in the Analecta. I have followed Chu Hai in translating Ying-ta paraphrases:一守直不變,復 行充管, 'He holds to what is upright, and

2. 'The good man tries to proceed according to the right path, but when he has gone halfway, he abandons it :- I am not able so to stop.

3. 'The superior man accords with the course of the Mean. Though he may be all unknown, unregarded by the world, he feels no regret.—It is only the sage who is able for this.'

1. The way which the superior man pursues,

A modern writer makes the meaning:—'He does not change through being puffed up by the fulness of office.' Both of these views go on the interpretation of signification, and = 12 in the last clause. 塞 45-實.

11. Only the sage can come up to the re-QUIREMENTS OF THE MEAN. ı. 素 is found written , 'to examine,' 'to study,' in a work of the Han dynasty, and Chu adopts 'that character as the true reading, and explains accordingly:- 'To study what is obscure and wrong(医解)' K'ang-ch'ang took it as= , 'towards,' or, 'being inclined to,' and both he and Ying-ta explain as in the translathe next chapter, prize is given as one of the characteristics of the Mean. The 遯世云

辞世 is said to be different from 滅世, the latter being applicable to the recluse who withdraws from the world, while the former may describe one who is in the world, but does not act with a reference to its opinion of him. It will be observed how Confucius declines saying that he had himself attained to this highest style.—'With this chapter,' says Chû Hsì, 'the quotations by Tsze-sze of the Master's words, to explain the meaning of the first chap-ter, stop. The great object of the work is to set forth wisdom, benevolent virtue, and valour, as the three grand virtues whereby entrance is tion. It is an objection to Chu's view, that, in effected into the path of the Mean, and therethe next chapter. is given as one of the by reference to Shun, Yen Yûan, and Tsae-lû; Shun possessing the wisdom, Yen Yûan the benevolence, and Tsze-lû the valour. If one of 7, in par. 3, moreover, agree well with the these virtues be absent, there is no way of adelder view. a 君子 is here the same as in the last chapter, par. 3. A distinction is made that chapter, par. 3. A distinction is made that chapter, par. 3. A distinction is made that chapter. So, Chu Hst. The student forming between 遵道 here and 依道 below. a judgment for himself, however, will not see with the knowledge of it; yet in its utmost reaches, there is that which even the sage does not know. Common men and women, however much below the ordinary standard of character, can carry it into practice; yet in its utmost reaches, there is that which even the sage is not able to carry into practice. Great as heaven and earth are, men still find some things in them with which to be dissatisfied. Thus it is that, were the superior man to speak of his way in all its greatness, nothing in the world would be found able to embrace it, and were he to speak of it in its minuteness, nothing in the world would be found able to split it.

It is said in the Book of Poetry, 'The hawk flies up to heaven; the fishes leap in the deep.' This expresses how this way is seen above and below.

very distinctly any reference to these cardinal virtues. The utterances of the sage illustrate the phrase | , showing that the course of the Mean had fallen out of observance, some overshooting it, and others coming short of it. When we want some precise directions how to attain to it, we come finally to the conclusion that only the sage is capable of doing so. We greatly want teaching, more practical and precise.

12. The course of the Mean reaches far and WIDE, BUT YET IS SECRET. With this chapter, the third part of the work commences, and the first sentence,—君子之道, 費而隱, may be regarded as its text. If we could determine satisfactorily the signification of those two terms, we should have a good clue to the meaning of the whole, but it is not easy to do so. The old view is inadmissible. K'ang-ch'ang takes as = 16, 'doubly involved,' 'perverted, and both he and Ying-ta explain : When right principles are opposed and disallowed, the superior man retires into obscurity, and does not hold office.' On this view of it, man. 2 夫婦=匹夫, 匹婦, Ans-the sentence has nothing to do with the succeeding chapters. The two meanings of in the dictionary are-'the free expenditure of money, and 'dissipation,' or 'waste.' According to Chû, in this passage, 智即用乙 看也,'譬 indicates the wide range of the tão in practice.' Something like this must be its meaning :—the course of the Mean, requiring everywhere to be exhibited. Chu then defines 隱點體之後,'the minuteness of the se in its nature or essence.' The former answers to the what of the tao, and the latter to the why. But it rather seems to me, that the kere is the same with the and th, i. 4, and that the author simply intended to say that the way of the superior man reaching everywhere, embracing all duties,—yet had its spring and seat in the Heaven-gifted nature,

4. The way of the superior man may be found, in its simple elements, in the intercourse of common men and women; but in its utmost reaches, it shines brightly through heaven and earth.

The twelfth chapter above contains the words of Texe-sze, and is designed to illustrate what is said in the first chapter, that 'The path may not be left.' In the eight chapters which follow, he quotes, in a miscellaneous way, the words of Confucius to illustrate it.

CHAP. XIII. 1. The Master said, The path is not far from man. When men try to pursue a course, which is far from the common indications of consciousness, this course cannot be considered THE PATH.

3. When one cultivates to the utmost the principles of his nature, and exercises them on the principle of reciprocity, he is not far from the path. What you do not like when done to yourself, do not do to others.

4. 'In the way of the superior man there are four things, to not one of which have I as yet attained.—To serve my father, as I would require my son to serve me: to this I have not attained; to serve my prince, as I would require my minister to serve me: to this I have not attained; to serve my elder brother, as I would require my younger brother to serve me: to this I have not attained; to set the example in behaving to a friend, as I would require him to behave to me: to this I have not attained. Situated among barbarous tribes, he does what is proper to a situation among barbarous tribes. In a position of sorrow and difficulty, he does what is proper to a position of sorrow and difficulty. The superior man can find himself in no situation in which he is not himself.

4. Thus it is that the superior man is quiet and calm, waiting for the appointments of Heaven, while the mean man walks in dangerous paths, looking for lucky occurrences.

5. The Master said, 'In archery we have something like the way of the superior man. When the archer misses the centre of the target, he turns round and seeks for the cause of his failure in himself."

CHAP. XV. 1. The way of the superior man may be compared to what takes place in travelling, when to go to a distance we must first traverse the space that is near, and in ascending a height, when we must begin from the lower ground.

2. It is said in the Book of Poetry, 'Happy union with wife and children, is like the music of lutes and harps. When there is concord among brethren, the harmony is delightful and enduring. Thus # 3. By is explained in the dictionary, to it in leather. It is not meant, however, by makes the meaning plain. 4. 5, according te K'ang-ch'ang, 猶平安, 'is equivalent to peaceful and tranquil,' Chû Hai says, - 5, 平地也,'易means level ground.' more remote. Thus it is, that from what is near we proceed to what is remote. He adds that anciently the relationship of husband and wife was not among the five relationships of society, because the union of brothers is from Heaven and that of husband and wife is from man! 3. This is understood to be a remark of Confucius on the ode. From wife, and children, and brothers, parents at last are reached, illustrating how from what is low we ascend to what is high.—But all this is far-fetched and obscure.

16. An illustration, prom the operation and INPLUENCE OF SPIRITUAL BEINGS, OF THE WAY OF THE MEAN. What is said of the knocl-chan in this chapter is only by way of illustration. There is no design, on the part of the sage, to develop his views on those beings or agencies. The key of it is to be found in the last paragraph, where the 夫徽之顯 evidently refers to 莫顯乎徼 in chap. i. This aragraph, therefore, should be separated from the others, and not interpreted specially of the food-side. I think that Dr. Medhurst, in rendering it (Theology of the Chinese, p. 22) How great then is the manifestation of their abstraceness! Whilst displaying their sincerity, they are not to be concealed, was wrong, not-withstanding that he may be defended by the example of many Chinese commentators. The second clause of par. 5,-誠之不可

However we may be driven to find a recondite, mystical, meaning for in the 4th part of this work, there is no necessity to do so here. With regard to what is said of the know-adm, it is only the first two paragraphs which occasion difficulty. In the 3rd par., the sage speaks of the spiritual beings that are sacrificed to. read châi; see Analects, VII. xii. The same is rean can; see anniecus, v.I.. III. The same is the subject of the 4th per.; or rather, spiritual beings generally, whether sacrificed to or not, invisible themselves and yet able to behold our conduct. See the Shih-ching, III. iii. Ode II. st. 7, which is said to have been composed by one of the dukes of Wei, and was repeated daily in his hearing for his admonition. the context of the quotation, he is warned to be careful of his conduct, when alone as when in company. For in truth we are never alone 'Millions of spiritual beings walk the earth,' and can take note of us. The H is a final particle here, without meaning. It is often used 度, read to, 4th teme, so in the Shih-ching. 'to conjecture,' 'to surmiss.' , read yi, 4th tone, 'to dislike.' What now are the

kesi-shan in the first two paragraphs. Are we is more than a play upon words. to understand by them something different from what they are in the third par., to which they run on from the first as the nominative or subject of []? I think not. The precise meaning of what is mid of them in make it is cannot be determined. The old interpreters say that 電電 = 件, 'to give birth to; that | = | | that which; that 不可過一不有所遺, there is nothing which they neglect; and that the meaning of the whole is—that of all things there is not a single thing which is not produced by the breath (or energy; (a)) of the hver-shan.'
This is all that we learn from them. The Sung school explain the terms with reference to their physical theory of the universe, derived, as they think, from the Yi-ching. Chû's master, Ch'ang, explains:—'The knosi-shôn are the energetic operations of Heaven and Earth, and the traces of production and transformation.' The scholar Chăng (是天) says :—'The kwei-shăn are the easily acting powers of the two breaths of nature (______). Chû Hsi's own account is :-- If we speak of two breaths, then by know is denoted the efficaciousness of the secondary or inferior one, and by shan, that of the superior one. If we speak of one breath, then by shan is denoted its advancing and developing, and by keei, its returning and reverting. They are really only one thing.' It is difficult—not to say impossible—to conceive to one's self exactly what is meant by such descriptions. And nowhere else in the Four Books is there an approach to this meaning of the phrase. Mao Hai-ho is more comprehensible; though, after planation is :- 'But in truth, the knosi-shon are 道. In the Yi-ching the 全 and B are considered to be the kwei-shan; and it is said -- "one 陰 and one 陽 are called 道." Thus the kneed shanare the 道, embodied in Heaven (情大) for the nourishment of things. But in the text we have the term instead of i, because the latter is the name of the absolute as embodied in Heaven, and the former denotes the same not only embodied, but operating to the nourishing of things, for Heaven considers the production of things to be 德.' See the 中 庸說, in loc.

Rémusat translates the first paragraph:—
'Que les vertus des esprits sont sublimes!' His Latin version is:— Spirituum geniorumque est virtus: es capax! Intorcetta renders:— Spiritibus inest operativa virtus et efficacitas, et hæc o quam præstans est! quam multiplex! quam sublimis! In a note, he and his friends say that the dignitary of the kingdom who assisted them, rejecting other interpretations, understood by kwei-shan here those spirits for the veneration of whom, and imploring their help, sacrifices were instituted. ignifies 'spirits,' 'a spirit,' 'spirit;' and , 'a ghost,' or 'demon.' The former is used for the animus, or intelligent soul separated from the body, and the latter for the anima, or animal, grosser, soul, so separated. In the text, however, they blend together, and are not to be separately translated. They are together equivalent to in par. 4, spirits, of 'spiritual beings."

The paraphrasts, however, try to trace it in this way:—'A son without virtue is insufficient to distinguish his parents. But Shun was born with all knowledge and acted without any effort;—in virtue, a sage. How great was the distinction which he thus conferred on his parents!' And so with regard to the other predicate. See the 日講 四海之內: -on this expression it is said in the encyclopadia called 博物志:- The four cardinal points of heaven and earth are connected together by the waters of seas, the earth being a small space in the midst of them. Hence, he who rules over the kingdom $(\mathcal{F}\mathcal{T})$ is said to govern all within the four seas.' See also note on Analects, XII. v. 4. The characters 宗蘭 are thus explained: - Tsung means honourable. Mido means figure. The two together mean the place where the figures of one's ancestors are.' So we must take it here,—'enjoyed him; ' that is, his sacrifices. As Shun resigned the throne to Yü, and it did not run in the line of his family, we must take 保之 as in the translation. In the time of the Chau dynasty, there were descendants of Shun, possessed of the State of Ch'an (), and of course sacrificing to him. 2. The imust refer in every case to 大德;- 'its place, its emolument, &c.; that is, what is appropriate to such great virtue. The whole is to be understood with reference to Shun. In 追王, 王 is in the 4th tone, in which the character means—'to exercise the sovereign power.' 上配先公云云 -the house of Chau traced their lineage up to the Ti Ku (帝皇), a.c. 2432. But in various passages of the Shû, king Tai and king Chi are spoken of, as if the conference of those titles had been by king Wû. On this there are very long discussions. See the 中庸說 in ice. The truth seems to be, that Chau-kung, carrying out his brother's wishes by laws of State, confirmed the titles, and made the general rule about burials and secrifices which is described.

CHAP. XIX. 1. The Master said, 'How far-extending was the filial piety of king Wû and the duke of Châu!

2. 'Now filial piety is seen in the skilful carrying out of the wishes of our forefathers, and the skilful carrying forward of their undertakings.

3. 'In spring and autumn, they repaired and beautified the templehalls of their fathers, set forth their ancestral vessels, displayed their various robes, and presented the offerings of the several seasons.

4. 'By means of the ceremonies of the ancestral temple, they distinguished the royal kindred according to their order of descent. By ordering the parties present according to their rank, they distinguished the more noble and the less. By the arrangement of the subjects of the princes and the sovereign, and feelings of kindred must not be allowed to come into collision with the relation of governor and coverned. On the 'three years' mourning,' see Analecta, XVII. xxi.

19. THE PAR-REACHING FILIAL PIETY OF KING WÛ, AND OF THE DUKE OF CHÂU. I. 達 is taken by Chû as meaning—'universally acknowledged;' 'far-extending' is better, and accords with the meaning of the term in other parts of the Work. 2. This definition of 🔀 or 'filial piety,' is worthy of notice. Its operation ceases not with the lives of parents and parents' parents. 人=前人,'antecedent men; but English idiom seems to require the addition of our. 3. 春秋,—the sovereigns of China sacrificed, as they still do, to their parties personating the deceased were invested. 4. It was an old interpretation that the sacri-fices and accompanying services, spoken of here, were not the seasonal services of every year, which are the subject of the preceding paragraph, but the great and Inc sacrifices; and to that view I would give in my adhesion. The sovereign, as mentioned above, had seven One belonged to the remote ancestor to whom the dynasty traced its origin. At the great sacrifices, his spirit-tablet was placed fronting the east, and on each side were ranged, three in a row, the tablets belonging to the six others, those of them which fronted the south being, in the genealogical line, the fathers of e who fronted the north. As fronting the south, the region of brilliancy, the former were called R; the latter, from the north, the sembre region, were called 🐼. As the dynasty was prolonged, and successive sovereigns died, the older tablets were removed, and transferred to what was called the 永東原, yet so that one in the III line displaced the topmost III, and so with the . At the sacrifices, the royal kindred arranged themselves as they were descended from a III on the left, and from a ness of place was maintained among them. The ceremony of 'general (旅=架) pledging' occurred towards the end of the sacrifice. Chû Hsî takes 篇 in the 3rd tone, saying that to have anything to do at those services was accounted honourable, and after the sovereign had commenced the ceremony by taking 'a cup of blessing,' all the juniors presented a similar cup to the seniors, and thus were called into employment. Ying-tâ takes 🖺 in its ordinary tone, 下為上, 'the inferiors were the superiors,' i.e. the juniors did present a cup to their elders, but had the honour of drinking first themselves. The twas a concluding feast confined to the royal kindred. 5. 其位, according to K'ang-ch'ang, is—'ascended their thrones; according to Chû, it is 'trod on—i.e. occupied—their places in the ancestral temple.' On either view, the stateancestral temple.' On either view, the statement must be taken with allowance. The ancestors of king Wû had not been kings, and their places in the temples had only been those of princes. The same may be said of the four particulars which follow. By 'those whom they'—i, e, their progenitors—'honoured' are they'-i. e. their progenitorsintended their ancestors, and by 'those whom they loved,' their descendants, and indeed all on the right, and thus a genealogical correct-cluding sentences are important, as the Jesuits mainly based on them the defence of their | self, that the service of one being-even of God practice in permitting their converts to continue the sacrifices to their ancestors. We read in 'Confusius Sindrum philosophus,'—the work of Intercetta and others, to which I have made frequent reference:— Ex plurimis et clarissimis textibus Sinicis proburi polest, legitimum pradicti axiomatis sensum esse, quod eadem intentione et fornall motivo Sinenses naturalem pietatem et politicu ogreisam erga defrancios exerceant, siculi erga com adhus superstites exercebant, ex quibus et ex infra disendis prudens lector facile deducet, has ritus circa mdis prudens lector facile deducet, hos ritus circa uncles fuises mere civiles, institutes duminavai in honorem et obsequium parentum, etiam post moriem non intermittendum; nam si quid ülic divinum agnoviesent, our diceret Confucius-Priscos servire solitos defunctis, uti iisdem serviebant viventibus.' This is ingenious reasoning, but does it meet the fact that sacrifice is an entirely new element introduced into the service of the dead? 6. What is said about the sacrifices to God, however, is important, in reference to the views which we should form about the ancient religion of China. K'ang-ch'ang took of to be the macrifice to Heaven, offered, at the winter solstice, in the southern suburb () of the imperial city; and mt to be that offered to the Earth, at the summer solstice, in the northern. Chû agrees with him. Both of them, however, add that after \(\frac{1}{16} \) we are to understand 七, 'Sovereign Earth (不言后土 文) This view of 前 here is vehesently controverted by Mao and many others. The ceremonies of the ancestral temple embrace the great and less frequent services of the 前音 and 声台 (see the Amslects, III. x. 11) and the seasonal sacrifices, of which only the autumnal one (📜) is specified here. The old commentators take 📉 as =] with the meaning of , 'to place,' and in pret—'the government of the kingdom would be as easy as to place anything in the palm. This view is defended in the 中庸說. It has the advantage of accounting better for the . We are to understand 'the meaning of the sacrifices to ancestors, as including all the uses mentioned in par. 4. It is not e to understand the connexion between the first part of this paragraph and the general object of the chapter. Taking the paragraph by itself, it teaches that a proper knowledge and practice of the duties of religion and filial pacty would amply equip a ruler for all the duties of his government.

20. ON GOVERNMENT: SHOWING PRINCIPALLY HOW IT DEPENDS ON THE CHARACTER OF THE OF Picers administrating it, and now that depe OF THE CHARACTER OF THE SOVERHOR HIM We have here one of the fullest exposition Confucius's views on this subject, unfolds them only as a description of government of the kings Wan and Wa. In chapter there is the remarkable interming which we have seen in 'The Great Learnin of what is peculiar to a ruler, and what is universal application. From the concluding paragraphs, the transition is easy to the next and most difficult part of the Work. This of the soil, affects the judgment of the Sage him-occasiderable additions.

2. The Master said, 'The government of Wan and Wû is displayed in the records,—the tablets of wood and bamboo. Let there be the men and the government will flourish; but without the men, their government decays and ceases.

3. With the right men the growth of government is rapid, just as vegetation is rapid in the earth; and moreover their government might be called an easily-growing rush.

4. Therefore the administration of government lies in getting proper men. Such men are to be got by means of the ruler's own character. That character is to be cultivated by his treading in the ways of duty. And the treading those ways of duty is to be cultivated by the cherishing of benevolence.

7. 'Hence the sovereign may not neglect the cultivation of his own character. Wishing to cultivate his character, he may not neglect to serve his parents. In order to serve his parents, he may not neglect to acquire a knowledge of men. In order to know men, he may not dispense with a knowledge of Heaven.

8. 'The duties of universal obligation are five, and the virtues wherewith they are practised are three. The duties are those between sovereign and minister, between father and son, between

This virtue is called man, 'because loving, feeling, and the forbearing nature, belong to man, as he is born. They are that whereby man is man.' See the 中庸說, in loc. 殺,—in the 3rd tone, read shái. It is opposed to 🎉, and means 'decreasing,' 'growing less.' For 禮所生 we have, in the 家語,禮所 #, which would seem to mean—'are that whereby ceremonies are produced.' But there follow the words—禮者政之本也. 'He may not be without knowing men.'—Why? 'Because,' we are told, it is by honouring, and being courteous to the worthy, and securing them as friends, that a man perfects his virtue, and is able to serve his relatives.' 'He may not be without knowing Heaven.'—Why? 'Because,' it is said, 'the gradations in the love of relatives and the honouring the worthy, are all heavenly ar-rangements and a heavenly order,—natural, necessary, principles.' But in this explanstion, 知人 has a very different meaning from what it has in the previous clause. too, is here parents, its meaning being more re-husband and wife, between elder brother and younger, and those belonging to the intercourse of friends. Those five are the duties of universal obligation. Knowledge, magnanimity, and energy, these three, are the virtues universally binding. And the means by which they carry the duties into practice is singleness.

9. 'Some are born with the knowledge of those duties; some know them by study; and some acquire the knowledge after a painful feeling of their ignorance. But the knowledge being possessed, it comes to the same thing. Some practise them with a natural ease; some from a desire for their advantages; and some by strenuous effort. But the achievement being made, it comes to the same thing.'

discharge of duty attainable by every one. What connects the various steps of the climax is the unlimited confidence in the power of the example of the ruler, which we have had occasion to point out so frequently in 'The Great Learning. 12. These nine standard rules, it is to be borne in mind, constitute the government of Wan and Wu, referred to in par. 2. Commentators arrange the 4th and 5th rules under the second; and the 6th, 7th, 8th, and 5th under the third, so that after 'the cultivation of the person,' we have here an expansion of 親親 and 賈賢, in par. 5. 爲=治, 'to govern.' By showing affection to his relatives, there is no grumbling nor resentment among his uncles and brethren. By respecting the great ministers. he is kept from errors in the practice of government. By kind and considerate treatment of the whole body of officers, they are led to make the most grateful return for his courtesies. therein.' Rather it seems to me, that the Z, according to the idiom pointed out several times in the Analects, simply intensifies the meaning of the different verbs, whose regimen it is. 20. Here we have the determination which is necessary in the prosecution of the when is necessary in the procession of the above processes, and par. 21 states the result of it. Chu Hai makes a pause at the end of the first clause in each part of the paragraph, and interprets thus:—'If he do not study, well. But if he do, he will not give over till he understands what he studies,' and so on. But it seems more natural to carry the supposition in A over the whole of every part, as in the transla-tion, which moreover substantially agrees with Ying th's interpretation.—Here terminates the third part of the Work. It was to illustrate, as

and the nine standard rules being included the next three are devoted to the one subject of filial piety, and the 20th, to the general subject of government. Some things are said worthy of being remembered, and others which require a careful sifting; but, on the whole, we do not find ourselves advanced in an understanding of the argument of the Work.

21. THE RECIPEOCAL CONNEXTOR OF SINCERITY AND INTELLIGENCE. With this chapter commences the fourth part of the Work, which, as Chû observes in his concluding note, is an expansion of the 18th paragraph of the preceding chapter. It is, in a great measure, a glorification of the sage, finally resting in the person of Confucius; but the high character of the sage, it is maintained, is not unattainable by others. He realizes the ideal of humanity but by his example and lessons, the same ide is brought within the reach of many, perhaps all. The above is the twenty-first chapter. Tsze-sze takes up in it, and discourses from, the subjects of 'the way of Heaven' and 'the way of men,' mentioned in the preceding The twelve chapters that follow are all from Tsze-sze, repeating and ·illustrating the meaning of this one.

CHAP. XXII. It is only he who is possessed of the most com-and we have no single term in English, which tivating the intelligence of what is good, raise can be considered as the complete equivalent of that character. The Chinese themselves had great difficulty in arriving at that definition of it which is now generally acquiesced in. In the 四書通(quoted in the 匯參,中庸, xvi. 5), we are told that 'the Han scholars were all ignorant of its meaning. Under the Sung dynasty, first came 李邦首, who defined it by 不欺, freedom from all deception. After him, 徐仲車 said that it meant 不良, ceaseless-Then, one of the Chang called it freedom from all moral error; and finally, Chû Hsî added to this the positive element of in truth and reality, on which the definition of was complete.' Rémusat calls it—la perfection, and la perfection morale. Intorcetta and his friends call it—vera solidaque perfectio. Simplicity or singleness of soul seems to be what is chiefly intended by the term ;—the disposition to, and capacity of, what is good, without any deteriorating element, with no defect of intelligence, or intremission of selfish thoughts. This belongs to Heaven, to Heaven and Earth, and to the themselves to this elevation. 姓 and 毅 carry us back to the first chapter, but the terms have a different force, and the longer I dwell upon it, the more am I satisfied with Chû Hai's pronouncement in his 語類, that 姓 is here 性之, 'possessing from nature,'and 数 = 趣 , 'learning it,' and therefore I have translated 譜 之 by—'is to be ascribed to.' When, however, he makes a difference in the connexion between the parts of the two clauses— 明矣,明則誠矣,and explains 則無不明·明則可以至誠'sincerity is invariably intelligent, and intelligence may arrive at sincerity,' this is not dealing fairly with his text.

Here, at the outset, I may observe that, in this portion of the Work, there are specially the three following dogmas, which are more than questionable:—Ist, That there are some men—S naturally in a state of moral perfection; and, That the same moral perfection is attainable by others, in whom its development is impeded by Sage. Men, not naturally sages, may, by cul- their material organization, and the influence plete sincerity that can exist under heaven, who can give its full development to his nature. Able to give its full development to his own nature, he can do the same to the nature of other men. Able to give its full development to the nature of other men, he can give their full development to the natures of animals and things. Able to give their full development to the natures of creatures and things, he can assist the transforming and nourishing powers of Heaven and Earth. Able to assist the transforming and nourishing powers of Heaven and Earth, he may with Heaven and Earth form a ternion.

of external things; and 3rd, That the understanding of what is good will certainly lead to such moral perfection.

As a man's.' Mae himself illustrates the 'extending of what is good will certainly lead to hausting the nature of things,' by reference to such moral perfection.

22. THE RESULTS OF SINCERITY; AND HOW THE POSSESSOR OF IT PORMS A TREMION WITH HEAVEN AND RARTH. On 天下至誠, Chû Hsî says that it denotes 'the reality of the virtue of the Sage, to which there is nothing in the world that can be added.' This is correct, and if we were to render—'It is only the most sincere man under heaven,' the translation would be wrong. means simply 'to exhaust,' but, by what processes and in what way, the character tells us nothing about. The 'giving full develop-ment to his nature,' however, may be understood, with Mao, as = 'pursuing the PATH in accordance with his nature, so that what Heaven has conferred on him is displayed without shortcoming or let.' The 'giving its development to the nature of other men' indicates the Sage's helping them, by his example and lessons, to perfect themselves. 'His exhausting the nature of things, i.e. of all other beings, animate and inanimate, is, according to Cht, 'knowing them completely, and dealing with them correctly,' 'so,' add the paraphrasts, 'that he secures their prosperous increase and development according to their nature. Here, however, a Buddhist ides appears in Chû's commentary. He says:—
'The nature of other men and things (=animale) is the same with my nature, which, it is observed in Māo's Work, is the same with the Buddhist sentiment, that 'a dog has the nature of Buddha,' and with that of the philosopher Kao, that 'a dog's nature is the same | the supreme Power?

hausting the nature of things,' by reference to the Shû-ching, IV. iii. 2, where we are told that under the first sovereigns of the Hsia dynasty, 'the mountains and rivers all enjoyed tranquillity, and the birds and beasts, the fishes and tortoises, all realized the happiness of their nature. It is thus that the sage 'assists Heaven and Earth.' K'ang-ch'ang, indeed, explains this by saying :- 'The sage, receiving Heaven's appointment to the throne, extends everywhere a happy tranquillity. Evidently there is a reference in the language to the mystical peragraph in the 1st chapter— 致中和,天 地位烏馬物育焉. 'Heaven and Earth' take the place here of the single term-'Heaven,' in chap. xx. par. 18. On this Yingta observes:—'It is said above, sincerity is the way of Heaven, and here mention is made also of Earth. The reason is, that the reference abov was to the principle of sincerity in its spiritual and mysterious origin, and thence the expression simple, -The way of Heaven; but here we have the transformation and nourishing see in the production of things, and hence Earth is associated with Henren.' This is not very intelligible, but it is to bring out the idea of a ternion, that the great, supreme, ruling Power A is 'a file of three,' and is thus dualized. I employ 'ternion' to express the idea, just as we use 'quaternion' for a file of four. What is it but extravagance thus to file man with

Next to the above is he who cultivates to the utmost the shoots of goodness in him. From those he can attain to the possession of sincerity. This sincerity becomes apparent. From being apparent, it becomes manifest. From being manifest, it becomes brilliant. Brilliant, it affects others. Affecting others, they are changed by it. Changed by it, they are transformed. It is only he who is possessed of the most complete sincerity that can exist under heaven, who can transform.

CHAP. XXIV. It is characteristic of the most entire sincerity to be able to foreknow. When a nation or family is about to flourish, there are sure to be happy omens; and when it is about to perish, there are sure to be unlucky omens. Such events are seen in the milfoil and tortoise, and affect the movements of the four limbs. When calamity or happiness is about to come, the good

23. THE WAY OF MAN; -THE DEVELOPMENT OF | parison :- Put a stone on a bamboo shoot, or xxi. is defined by Chu Hsi as --- 1/6, one half, 'a part.' K'ang-ch'ang explains it br小小之事, 'very small matters.' Mac defines it by , 'a corner,' and refers to Analocta, VII. viii, 舉一隅不以三 隔反, as a sentiment analogous to the one in there is difficulty about the term. It properly means 'crooked,' and with a bad application, like fig., often signifies 'deflection from what is straight and right.' Yet it cannot have a bad meaning here, for if it have, the phrase, will be, in the connexion, appearances of things new are no. unintelligible. One writer uses this com-

It shows itself in shoots, but if they be cultivated and improved, a moral condition and influence may be attained, equal to that of the Sage.

24. THAT ENTIRE SINCERITY CAN FORKEROW. 至誠之道 is the quality in the abstract, while 2 at the end, is the entirely sincere individual,—the Sage, by nature, or by attainment. 百百元, 'lucky omens.' In the dictionary 声 is used to define 声. 声 may be used also of inauspicious omens, but here it cannot embrace such. Distinguishing between the two terms, Ying-tā says that unusual appearances of things existing in a country are ##, and are 'unlucky omens,' the former being spoken shall certainly be foreknown by him, and the evil also. Therefore the individual possessed of the most complete sincerity is like a spirit.

CHAP. XXV. 1. Sincerity is that whereby self-completion is effected, and its way is that by which man must direct himself.

2. Sincerity is the end and beginning of things; without sincerity there would be nothing. On this account, the superior man regards the attainment of sincerity as the most excellent thing.

3. The possessor of sincerity does not merely accomplish the self-completion of himself. With this quality he completes other men and things also. The completing himself shows his perfect

Divination by the milfoil was called 🗱 ; that by the tortoise was called 🕨 . They were used from the highest antiquity. See the Shû-ching, II. ii. 18; V. iv. 20-30. 'four limbs,' are by K'ang-ch'ang interpreted of the feet of the tortoise, each foot being eculiarly appropriate to divination in a particular season. Chu Hai interprets them of the four limbs of the human body. 47 mm must be left as indefinite in the translation as it is in the text.—The whole chapter is eminently absurd, and gives a character of ridiculousness to all the magniloquent teaching about 'entire sincerity.' The foreknowledge attributed to the Sage,—the mate of Heaven,—is only aguessing by means of augury, sorcery, and other follies.

25. How PROM SENCERITY COMES SELF-COMPLE-TION, AND THE COMPLETION OF OTHERS AND OF I have had difficulty in translating this chapter, because it is difficult to understand it. We wish that we had the writer before us to question him; but if we had, it is not likely that he would be able to afford us much satisfaction. Persuaded that what he denominates cover is a figment, we may not wonder at is here 天命之件, the Heaven-conferred nature, and that 道 is 奉性之道, 'be path which is in accordance with the nature. They are probably correct, but the difficulty comes when we go on with this view of the the next paragraph. 2. I translate the expe sion of this in the 日識:-- 'All that fill up the space between heaven and earth are things (均可). They end and they begin again; they begin and proceed to an end; every change being accomplished by sincerity, and every phenomenon having sincerity unceasingly in So far as the mind of man is concerned, if there be not sincerity, the every movement of it is vain and false can an unreal mind accomplish real things Although it may do something, that is simple equivalent to nothing. Therefore the superior man searches out the source of sincerity, and examines the evil of insincerity, chooses what is good, and firmly holds it fast, so seeking arrive at the place of truth and reality. Mae's explanation is :- 'Now, since the reason why the sincerity of spiritual beings is so incaps of being repressed, and why they foreknow, because they enter into things, and there is nothing without them — shall there be anything which is without the entirely shouse man, who is as a spirit? I have given these specimens of commentary, that the reader may, the extravagance of its predicates. I. All the if he can, by means of them, gatner so virtue. The completing other men and things shows his knowledge. Both these are virtues belonging to the nature, and this is the way by which a union is effected of the external and internal. Therefore, whenever he—the entirely sincere man—employs them,—that is, these virtues,—their action will be right.

CHAP. XXVI. 1. Hence to entire sincerity there belongs cease-lessness.

2. Not ceasing, it continues long. Continuing long, it evidences itself.

3. Evidencing itself, it reaches far. Reaching far, it becomes large and substantial. Large and substantial, it becomes high and brilliant.

4. Large and substantial;—this is how it contains all things. High and brilliant;—this is how it overspreads all things. Reaching far and continuing long;—this is how it perfects all things.

apprahensible meaning from the text. 3. I have translated 成 均 by—'complete other means and things also,' with a reference to the account of the achievements of sincerity, in chap, xxii. On 性之德也, 合外内之道也, the 日識 paraphrases:—'Now both this perfect virtue and knowledge are witteen certainly and originally belonging to our nature, to be referred for their bestowment to Heaven;—what distinction is there in them of external and internal?'—All this, so far as I can see, is but veiling ignorance by words without knowledge.

26. A PARALLEL ESTWEER THE SAGE POSSESSED OF ESTIES SINCERTY, AND HEAVER AND EARTH, SHOWING THAT THE SAME OUALITIES BELOW TO THEM. The first six paragraphs show the way of the Sage; the next three show the way of Heaven and Earth; and the last brings the two ways together, in their essential nature, in a passage from the Shib-ching. The doctrine of the chapter is liable to the criticisms which have been made on the sand chapter. And, moreover, there is in it a sad confusion of the visible heavens and earth with the immaterial power and reason which govern them; in a word, with God. I. Because of the Try, 'hence,' or 'therefore,' Chû Haî is condemned by recent writers

6. Such being its nature, without any display, it becomes manifested; without any movement, it produces changes; and without any effort, it accomplishes its ends.

7. The way of Heaven and Earth may be completely declared in one sentence.—They are without any doubleness, and so they produce things in a manner that is unfathomable.

8. The way of Heaven and Earth is large and substantial, high and brilliant, far-reaching and long-enduring.

9. The heaven now before us is only this bright shining spot; but when viewed in its inexhaustible extent, the sun, moon, stars, and constellations of the zodiac, are suspended in it, and all things are overspread by it. The earth before us is but a handful of soil; but when regarded in its breadth and thickness, it sustains for making a new chapter to commence here. Yet the matter is sufficiently distinct from that of the preceding one. Where the takes hold of the text above, however, it is not easy to discover. The gloss in the 備旨says that it indicates a conclusion from all the preceding predicates about sincerity. 至誠 is to be understood, now in the abstract, and now in the concrete. But the 5th paragraph seems to be the place to bring out the personal idea, as I have done. ### , 'without bounds,' = our infinite. Surely it is strange to apply that term in the description of any created being. 7. What I said was the prime idea in , viz. 'simplicity,' 'singleness of soul,' is very conspicuous here. 其爲物不貳 is the substantive verb. It surprises us, wever, to find Heaven and Earth called 'things,' at the same time that they are represented as by their entire sincerity producing all things. 9. This paragraph is said to illustrate the unfathomableness of Heaven and Earth in producing things, showing how it springs from their sincerity, or freedom from doubleness. I have already observed how it is only the material heavens and earth which are presented to us. And not only so;—we have mountains, seas, and rivers, set forth as acting with the same unfathomableness as those entire bodies and powers. The 備旨 says on this :-The hills and waters are what Heaven and Earth produce, and that they should yet be able themselves to produce other things, shows still more how Heaven and Earth, in the producing of things, are unfathomable,' The use of 🌋 🗷 the several clauses here perplexes the student. 多, Chû Hei says-一處而言之,'This is speaking of -'as it appears in one point.' The water now before us appears but a ladleful; yet extending our view to its unfathomable depths, the largest tortoises, iguanas, iguanodons, dragons, fishes, and turtles, are produced in them, articles of value and sources of wealth abound in them.

10. It is said in the Book of Poetry, 'The ordinances of Heaven, how profound are they and unceasing!' The meaning is, that it is thus that Heaven is Heaven. And again, 'How illustrious was it, the singleness of the virtue of king Wan! indicating that it was thus that king Wan was what he was. Singleness likewise is unceasing.

27. THE GLORIOUS PATH OF THE SAGE; AND HOW THE SUPERIOR MAN ENDEAVOURS TO ATTAIN TO IT. The chapter thus divides itself into two parts, one containing five paragraphs, descriptive of the Sacz, and the other two descriptive of the superior man, which two appellations are to be here distinguished. r. 'This paragraph,' says Chû Hat, 'embraces the two that follow.' They are, indeed, to be taken as exegetical of it. I, it is said, is here, as F, 'to fix.' The whole paragraph is merely

4. His presenting himself with his institutions before spiritual beings, without any doubts arising about them, shows that he knows Heaven. His being prepared, without any misgivings, to wait for the rise of a sage a hundred ages after, shows that he knows men.

5. Such being the case, the movements of such a ruler, illustrating his institutions, constitute an example to the world for ages. His acts are for ages a law to the kingdom. His words are for ages a lesson to the kingdom. Those who are far from him, look longingly for him; and those who are near him, are never wearied with him.

6. It is said in the Book of Poetry,—'Not disliked there, not here as the founders of the three dynasties, in the text) as the general trial of a ruler's viz. the great Yù, Tang, the Completer, and institutions by the efficacy of his sacrifices, in wan and Wû, who are so often joined together, being responded to by the various spirits whom and spoken of as one.  and should he worships. For the Shih-ching has

The various predicates here are explained by K'ang-ch'ang and Ying-ta, with reference to the Spring and Autumn, making them descriptive of it, but such a view will not stand examination. In translating the two first clauses, I have followed the editor of the 麥羅, who says:一脏流 者·以爲毗而纜述乙·蓋章者· 奉為憲而表章之. In the 紹聞 down, Confucius began with Yao and Shun, 'This describes,' says Chu Hai, 'the virtue of

Even if it he see "the smaller energies are like river of the clause in the last paragraph of the prereference to Confucius, the subject of the preceding chapter. K'ang-ch'ang's account of the 言德不如此 不 first paragraph is :-可以君大 \ 也 。盍傷 孔子有 其德而無其命. 'It describes how no who has not virtue such as this, can rule the kingdom, being a lamentation over the fact that while Confucius had the virtue, he did not have the appointment; 'that is, of Heaven, to occupy the throne. Mao's account of the whole chapter is:—'Had it been that Chung-ni possessed the throne, then Chung-ni was a perfect Sage. Being a perfect Sage, he would certainly have been able to put forth the greater energies, and the smaller energies, of his vir-to be thus descriptive of Confucius, I was inclined to translate in the past tenso,—'It was only he, who could,' &c. Still the author has expressed himself so indefinitely, that I have preferred translating the whole, that it may read as the description of the ideal man, who found, or might have found, his realisation in Confucius. 1. 唯天下至聖,—see chap.

All is taken as emphatic;— 默契焉,非但聞見之知而已 'he has an intuitive apprehension of, and agreement with, them. It is not that he knows them merely by hearing and seeing.' 夫馬有 This is joined by K'ang-ch'ang with the next paragraph, and he interprets it of the Master's virtue, universally affecting all men, and not partially deflected, reaching only to those near him or to few. Chû Hai more correctly, as it seems to me, takes it as = 何 菲, 'to depend on.' I translate the expansion of the clause which is given in Confucius Sinarum Philosophus:'-- 'The perfectly holy man of this kind therefore, since he is such and so great, how can it in any way be, that there is anything in the whole universe, on which he leans, or in which he inheres, or on which he behooves to depend, or to be assisted by it in the first place, that he may afterwards operate?' 2. The three clauses refer severally to the three in the preceding paragraph. 🧵 is virtuous humanity in all its dimensions and capacities, existing perfectly in the Sage. Of I do not know what to say. The old commentators interpret the second and third clauses, as if there

Of their seeing and hearing, their thinking and revolving, their moving and acting, men all say—It is from ME. Every one thus brings out his sats, and his smallness becomes known. But let the body be taken away, and all would be Heaven. How can the body be taken away? Simply by sub duing and removing that self-having of the This is the taking it away. That being doz so wide and great as Heaven is, my mind i also so wide and great, and production and transformation cannot be separated from man. Hence it is said—How vast is his Heaven. Just so, it is the way of the superior man to prefer the concealment of his virtue, while it daily becomes more illustrious, and it is the way of the mean man to seek notoriety, while he daily goes more and more to It is characteristic of the superior man, appearing insipid, yet never to produce satiety; while showing a simple negligence, yet to have his accomplishments recognised; while seemingly plain, yet to be discriminating. He knows how what is distant lies in what is near. He knows where the wind proceeds from. He knows how what is minute becomes manifested. Such an one, we may be sure, will enter into virtue.

2. It is said in the Book of Poetry, 'Although the fish sink and lie at the bottom, it is still quite clearly seen.' Therefore the superior man examines his heart, that there may be nothing wrong

83. THE COMMENCEMENT AND THE COMPLETION N 表 衣. wand 和 are synonyms. OF A VIETUOUS COURSE. The chapter is understood to contain a summary of the whole Work, and to have a special relation to the first chap-ter. There, a commencement is made with Heaven, as the origin of our nature, in which are grounded the laws of virtuous conduct. This ends with Heaven, and exhibits the progress of virtue, advancing step by step in man, till it is equal to that of High Heaven. There are eight citations from the Book of Poetry, but to make the passages suit his purpose, the author allegorises them, or alters their meaning, at his pleasure. Origen took no more license with the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments than Taze-sze and even Confucius himself do with the Book of Poetry. I. The first requisits in the pursuit of virtue is, that the learner think I his own improvement, and do not act from a regard to others. 詩日,—see the Shih-ching, I.v. The ode is understood to express the condolence of the people with the wife of the duke of Wei, worthy of, but denied, the affection of her husband. 君子之道,小人之道,一道 seems here to correspond exactly to our English way, as in the translation. 的然,—the primary meaning of his H, 'bright,' 'displayed.' 4. It is said in the Book of Poetry, 'In silence is the offering presented, and the spirit approached to; there is not the slightest contention.' Therefore the superior man does not use rewards, and the people are stimulated to virtue. He does not show anger, and the people are awed more than by hatchets and battle-axes.

The superior man going on to virtue, is watchful over himself when he 詩云,—see the Shih-ching, II. iv. Ode VIII. st. 11. The ode appears to have been written by some officer who was bewailing the disorder and misgovernment of his day. This is one of the comparisons which he uses;—the people are like fish in a shallow pond, unable to save themselves by diving to the bottom. The application of this to the superior man, dealing with himself, in the bottom of his soul, so to speak, and thereby realising what is good 志, 'the will,' and right, is very far-fetched. is here = Λ^{\vee} , 'the whole mind,' the self. 3. We have here substantially the same subject as in the last paragraph. The ode is the same the sovereign to a prince, as symbolic of his which is quoted in chap. xvi. 4, and the citation investiture with a plenipotent authority to cording to Chu Hsi, was the north-west cornei of ancient apartments, the spot most secret and retired. The single panes, in the roofs of Chinese houses, go now by the name, the light of heaven leaking in (漏) through them. Looking at the whole stanza of the ode, we must conclude that there is reference to the light of heaven, and the inspection of spiritual beings, as specially connected with the spot intended. 4. The result of the processes described in the two preceding paragraphs. 📑 🗐,—see the Shih-ching, IV. iii. Ode II. st. 2, where for 假 read as, and -格 奏 we have 鬷. The ode describes the royal worship of Tang, the founder of the Shang dynasty. The first clause belongs to the sovereign's act and demeanour: the second to the effect of these on his assistants in the service. They were awad to reverence, and had no striving among themselves. The sty were anciently given by

6. It is said in the Book of Poetry, 'I regard with pleasure your brilliant virtue, making no great display of itself in sounds and appearances.' The Master said, 'Among the appliances to transform the people, sounds and appearances are but trivial influences. It is said in another ode, "His virtue is light as a hair." Still, a hair will admit of comparison as to its size. "The doings of the supreme Heaven have neither sound nor smell."—That is perfect virtue.'

The above is the thirty-third chapter. Tsze-sze having carried his descriptions to the extremest point in the preceding chapters, turns back in this, and examines the source of his subject; and then again from the work of the learner, free from all

Taze-sze puts another meaning on the words, and makes them introductory to the next paragraph. 君子 must here be the 王 大下者 of chap. xxix. Thus it is that a constant shuffle of terms seems to be going on, and the subject before us is all at once raised to throw of the Yin dynasty, is set forth as without a higher, and inaccessible platform. 6. He therefore quotes again from III. iii. Ode VI. st. 6, though away from the original intention of the words. But it does not satisfy him that virtue should be likened even to a hair. He therefore finally quotes III. i. Ode I. st. 7, where the imperceptible working of Heaven (載=事), in producing the oversee of the nature and power of virtue.

He farther eulogizes its mysteriousness, till he speaks of it at last as without sound or smell. He here takes up the sum of his whole Work, and speaks of it in a compendious manner. Most deep and earnest was he in thus going again over his ground, admonishing and instructing men:—shall the learner not do his utmost in the study of the Work?
